Trysting — Trust and Freedom

By Teri Marsh

The Tryst (or Handfasting) ceremony is a ritual to celebrate a relationship that is already existing. This ritual is used by the members of WICCA, a womyn's religion. It teaches of a Mother-Goddess, Dianic (feminist) Witchcraft, womyn-identified power and wisdom, and other ancient ideologies. The literal meaning of the word TRYST is meeting and also "trust".

The following is a semi-fictional account of an actual Trysting celebration initiated by Z Budapest, who has served as the high priestess to the Susan B. Anthony Coven #1 for over a decade. The Trysting took place during the 1981 6th annual Womyn's Music Festival.

Nervously, I walked through the summer field. Ahead were a group of nearly 200 womyn, chanting and swaying in unison. We made our way to the innermost circle where we joined the handholding. The words to the chant became clear:

Lady, Lady, listen to my heartsong
Lady, Lady, listen to my heartsong
I will never forget you
I will never forsake you
I will never forget you
I will never forsake you
Lady, Lady

Every womyn's hair was adorned with a crown of braided ferns and flowers. In the center of the many-layered circle were two high priestesses who were purifying the circle. They were doing this with sticks of incense by walking clockwise around the circle and making pentagrams in the air.

On the ground at one edge of the circle there lay two chalices and a carafe. Next to it someone had placed a silver tray laden with fruit and vegetables.

the first two womyn who were to be Trysted were led to the center of the circle by one of the high priestesses, Z Budapest. She explains over the chanting, the meaning of what they were about to do. It is not a monogamous bonding like a patriarchal marriage; it is a dedication as a friend and a loved one. There are many things that have to be agreed upon. The two will love each other for life. That doesn't mean that they will be in a relationship for life, but that the love between the two will never die. If they are apart or in relationships with others, they have agreed to see each other at least once a year. If one is ill, the other must go to be with her. No matter what happens they will keep their love and their friendship.

The ceremony began with a blessing. An oil was rubbed through each womyn's hair and on her forehead while Z prayed. She took the oil and anointed the parts of the body that she referred to in the prayer.

Bless your mind, that you may think of the Goddess
Bless your eyes, that you may see her wisdom
Bless your nose that you may smell her sweetness
Bless these lips that you may speak of her
Bless your breasts, they are full and nurturing
Bless your genitals for passion and pleasure
Bless your feet that you may walk in the path of the Goddess

Each priestess held the hand of one of the womyn and lead her toward the altar where the feast was laid. One of the priestesses poured the wine into the chalices while the other spoke to the people. The lovers then voiced the promises that had been explained to them earlier. After each had quietly spoken, they took the wine and offered it to the other saying, "May you never thirst". Then they sampled the fruit, each feeding the other; "May you never hunger". The two held each other warmly awaiting the final moment.

In the center of the circle they laid a broom which they had made from long grass and a stick. They carefully walked around it, then stepped back. They prepared to leap over the broom. The ongoing chant had increased, both in volume and intensity. Over the singing, Z announced that the moment that they landed on the other side they would begin anew. They held hands and leapt. The crowd stopped chanting for the first time since the gathering had begun. They clapped and cheered while the lovers kissed.

The priestess then tied a purple ribbon around each womyn. Purple is not only the color for new beginnings, it also represents stability, strength, wealth, and love.

The ceremony is over. The two are pronounced "Lovers in Trust".

GAY MEDICINE

By Roger Gremminger, MD

I will interrupt my series on gonorrhoea for a special article on the new "gay cancer." There has been just a brief mention of a cancer dubbed a gay cancer in both the straight and gay press. This has evoked a lot of question and concern.

The disease or cancer in question is called Kaposi's Sarcoma. This cancer is not new and it is not gay. It has occurred for many years at a rate of 2 to 6 per 10,000,000. 76% has occurred in men with a mean age of 63 years. Previously survival time was 8-13 years and the patient frequently died with the cancer rather than from the cancer. So far in my medical career, I have seen at least three cases, all elderly, all men, and all previously diagnosed.

What is new is that this disease has been reported in a younger group of men all gay. The original report was in Morbidity and Mortality weekly Report of July 3, 1981. The article reported that 26 gay men were diagnosed with Kaposi's Sarcoma, twenty from New York and 6 from California. The patients ranged in age from 26-51 with a mean age of 39. Eight have died—all within 24 months of diagnosis. Thus we see the disease occurring in a younger group with much more serious course.

The primary presenting complaint of 50% is skin and mucous membrane lesions only. Often the lesions are dark blue to violaceous patches or bumps which resemble mulberries. Other presenting complaints have been swollen glands with the skin lesions, 20% weight loss and fever 10%; weight loss, fever, and pneumonia 10%.

The cancer affects primarily blood vessels and causes an overgrowth of veins. The rate that this occurs in gay men is alarming on a national level. And either we are dealing with a new variant of the disease or there are new risk factors which gay men are primarily exposed.

A speculation on my part is since poppers affect the veins causing dilation, perhaps one or all of the types of poppers may be responsible. This of course is only speculation.

The rate for Kaposi's Sarcoma is still very low and I doubt it will be seen here in Milwaukee. If you have any further questions please contact me at the Clinic.

Speaker Discusses Moral Majority, 'Go Get Them'

By Kevin Conaty

Dr. Daniel McGuire, reputed international lecturer and Professor of Theology at Marquette University called the Moral Majority, a right-wing group headed by the Rev. Jerry Falwell, "full of hatred, anti-semitism and racism".

Speaking at the October 12th meeting of the Cream City Business Association, McGuire continued his talk by relating the current increase in attacks on gays and lesbians to the Moral Majority and its related right-wing groups.

According to McGuire, "Falwell represents traditional WASP interests, who believes those who 'have' in this society got there because God likes them. If a person is one of the 'have nots' it must be because God doesn't like them." "Unfortunately," McGuire emphasized, "in this society the 'have nots' are gays, blacks, hispanics and anyone else who varies from the white upper class mold."

McGuire concluded his talk by encouraging gays and lesbians to "Go Get Them!" He advocated the forming of a coalition of many peoples to fight the right-wing trend and he emphasized the point that it is too late for each one to fight separately if we are to have any chance at succeeding.

'Swish Them Hips' — A Fable

(Beginning with this issue of "OUR HORIZONS" author John Luedtke's off, off Broadway musical will be published in segments. For copies of the entire script, contact John through "OUR HORIZONS".)

SWISH THEM HIPS SCENE ONE

A musical fable that tells of some mythical bars in a mythical city and some mythical people called homosexuals — mythically speaking.

Our hero is Harold Devore. Harold has a good job at the Library, a nice apartment on Saint Paul Avenue (one of those mythical streets I was telling you about), and a black evening dress. You see, Harold is a homosexual, but he doesn't know it. Well, he knows it, but he's just not sure what to do about it. You see, Harold is in a mythical place called the Closet. All of this is about to change.

Harold: (starting to dress) Well, it looks like it's you and me again tonight. (looking at the zipper) I wonder how this thing goes on? (telephone rings)

Mark: Hello Harold.

Harold: Oh, hi Mark. How's my baby brother?

Mark: OK, I guess. Mr. Sanders is in Chicago this weekend, so I'm alone ... again.

Harold: Another weekend off, huh? Boy, how do you rate? Doesn't Sanders ever come home?

Mark: I'm beginning to think not. This is his third trip in two months.

Harold: I can't believe it. What a cushy job. Houseboy to David Sanders, richest man in the city. He's gone so much you must be paid for doing almost nothing. I wish I had it so good (looking at the dress). Mark, I have a few things I'd like to talk over with you.

Mark: Harold: Am I getting old?

Harold: Old!!! Mark, you're only 19!

Mark: I know. But I'll be 20 in three months, and I've got to shave almost every day now. Dave isn't spending any time at the house anymore. Harold ... about my job, Mr. Sanders ... Dave and I ... we're

(doorbell)

Harold: Sorry Mark, but I've got someone at the door. Listen, it sounds like you need to talk. So do I. Maybe I could meet you for a drink later tonight.

Mark: Not tonight Harold. I've kinda got plans.

Harold: Well, maybe I could join you?

Mark: I don't think so. I don't think you'd be comfortable at the bar that I'm going to be visiting.

(persistent doorbell)

Harold: Whatever, you say Mark. Listen, I've got to answer the door. Why don't you call me tomorrow?

Mark: (a little dejected) That's fine Harold. I'll call you tomorrow. Bye.

(Harold answers the door. Albert enters)

Albert: Well it's about time, Mary. I nearly froze my mascara off in that lobby. How about a drink?

Harold: Hello, Al. What brings you here?

Albert: Don't you remember what you said at work today?

Harold: Refresh my memory.

Albert: Well, Mr. Librarian, you said you were bored and looking for something new and exciting to do.

Harold: Yes, so on the way home from work today, I stopped off and bought a Monopoly game.

Albert: Oh, come on Dear. My plans have Marvin Gardens beat by at least 8 inches. Now what about my drink!!

Gay Business Owners

No doubt about it, people work or get into a business for themselves to make money! Don't get us wrong, there is nothing wrong with trying to make a living, trying to provide employment for others and trying to get just a little ahead. (We aren't in business to go broke either!)

Some of the gay business owners have been very supportive of the development of a gay press here in Milwaukee. From day one, two businesses have been right there, stretching their budgets as far as possible to get news (and certainly word of their product) out to Milwaukee gays and lesbians and those concerned about our lives.

We wish to not only loudly applaud those businesses for their vision and foresight, but wish to ask that you especially patronize those who regularly advertise in these pages — that is a thank you to them!

As the history of our nation so poignantly reminds us, a FREE PRESS is our primary protector and guarantor of liberty and justice (even when it seems like it is so far away).

We wish to point out that gay business owners are not just those who primarily serve the gay/lesbian community, but the others like a bank, gift shops, bookstores and hair salons (we hope others will soon be joining us — the places that we spend our money should support the gay press!).

Then there are other gay business owners. Although they have never paid legitimate advertising rates (Gay Milwaukee was underwritten by Gay Chicago and GPU News was a non-profit publication), they howl at rates which reflect genuine costs with no profit margin; many fail to respond to phone calls or respond to visits at their places of business upon leaving many messages. Some even have the audacity to make appointments and either arrive very late or not at all (six times one tavern owner stood us up after making each appointment himself!).

Then there are other businesses which cater a segment of their business to gay money and refuse to assist in any way to insure that YOU receive both legitimate news and other entertainment information.

Does any business have any responsibility to the community that they make money from?

Gays from other cities in the U.S. have made it a point to let brothers and sisters know who supports and who doesn't support the gay press. Gays have moved to boycott businesses (like our black brothers and sisters before us and women today) who simply take from the community that supports them. Certainly we hope that this won't ever happen here in Milwaukee!

What is a gay business owners (including ourselves) responsibility to our primary community? This question and many others have to be answered, in our opinion. The non-gay community keeps pressure on their businesses to produce and give back to those paying in. Advertising is one way of guaranteeing a free press, but what about leadership in this Milwaukee gay and lesbian setting? Is it perhaps time for leaders of our many businesses and organizations to sit down to begin to help us grow into happy, healthy, psychologically mature and fully participating American citizens?

MONEY TALK

Who is Joe Granville?

By Jim Welsh*

With all the commotion a while ago regarding Joe Granville, it might be worthwhile to see if it was worth it. Probably not.

Although Granville has the best record in calling the market, (he has called every move of over 100 points within 2% since 1974) many of his believers are unsophisticated investors who wind up being stampeded. The net result is that these investors wind up buying and selling in force and all costing each other money.

But aside from this, Granville does have a good record. How has he done it? His method is to use a technical approach rather than a fundamental one.

The fundamental approach attempts to forecast stock prices based upon the level of interest rates, the health of the economy as it relates to corporate earnings, dividend yields, and price earnings ratios. The problem with the fundamental approach is that stock prices are usually their highest when things look good.

A technician attempts to forecast stock prices based upon volume trends, the number of stocks moving up versus down, the number of stocks making new highs and lows, and making sure that all the various market averages are moving together.

Personally, I lean more to the technical approach, but I believe a combination of both makes the most sense.

On October 5, 1981, I sent out the following letter to my customers. I believe it reflects a combination of both the fundamental and technical approaches.

HAS THE MARKET BOTTOMED?

Many times after the market declines sharply in a short period, the decline ends in what is termed a selling climax. The general characteristics are a day when the market is down more than 15 points, declines outnumber advances by 10 to 1, and very large volume, usually more than 60 million shares. The most important feature is that the day ends with a strong rally that a minimum recovers half the decline.

On March 27, 1980, the market experienced a selling climax. After being down almost 25 points, the market rallied strongly to close down less than 3 points on over 63 million shares. This proved to be the internal bottom on this 150 point decline. The external bottom occurred on April 22, 1980 as the Dow Jones Industrial Average made a new unconfirmed low.

An unconfirmed new low occurs as the DJIA betters a previous low while the majority of market indexes are higher than their previous lows. As you can see, that is exactly what occurred when comparing the lows of March 27, 1980 and April 21, 1980.

The significance of an unconfirmed new low is that it means the market's new direction is up.

On September 28, 1981, the market experienced another decline which had some of the characteristics of a selling climax. After being down over 14 points, the market rallied to finish up 18 points on 61 million shares. This internal bottom must, however, be followed by an external bottom marked by an unconfirmed new low by the DJIA.

So, what has to happen would be a new Dow low below 824.01 where the majority of market indexes are higher than on September 25, 1981. So, until this has occurred, the direction of the market is down.

Near term, the market appears headed up but a retest is inevitable. So, no matter how high the market goes on this rally, it is my opinion for a lasting upturn a successful retest as outlined is necessary for a market bottom. My best guess before the retest would be the beginning of the week October 19, 1981.

There are a number of factors that can be monitored that would increase the probability of a successful retest.

If the Federal Funds rate declined to below 14 percent, the current level of the discount rate, this would be very positive. Over the last 50 years every major market bottom has seen the Federal Funds rate decline below the discount rate. In the week ended 9/30, the Federal Funds rate averaged 15.00 percent.

A drop in the 90-day Treasury Bill rate below the discount rate is also necessary for a market bottom. In the week ended 9/30, the 90-day Treasury Bill rate averaged 14.23 percent.

Finally, if the discount rate would be reduced again, this would help. Two consecutive reductions in the discount rate has also been a good indicator of major market bottoms.

'Swish Them Hips'

Albert: A Passion Fruits Dream, please. Heavy on the fruit.

Harold: What???

Albert: Passion Fruits Dream. One shot time Vodka, half a shot Raspberry Liqueur, half a shot of Gran Marnier, topped off with a wedge of pineapple and a splash of Hawaiian punch.

Harold: Wow! I'm not sure I've got all of those ingredients ... I mean ... Raspberry Liqueur!!

Albert: OK tall, tan and tragic, make it a Slow Screw.

Harold: Now that I can handle (moves to the bar).

Albert: Mmmmm. I'll bet you can swivel hips (notices the dress). Say ... what have we here?

Harold: Oh, that's something I bought for ... my mother.

Albert: (checking the tags) Size twelve, huh. Listen, Dear, I've seen your mother, and that size twelve will barely cover her last name.

Harold: Well ... I ... uh ...

Albert: Oh, don't worry about it. I know where you're coming from. That's why I'm here.

Harold: You mean you know ... about me?

Albert: Oh, Honey, you're the talk of the Periodicals Section. Harold Devore ... 31 years old ... gorgeous ... and still in the closet.

Harold: The what?

Albert: Closet, Dear. Coats, shoes, dresses, and you. Say, you are in the dark, aren't you? I've seen the way you like the stamps on those overdue notices. Honey, I think you're overdue yourself. I'm here to change all that.

Harold: What do you mean?

Albert: My little closet case ... you are coming out!

Harold: What does that mean?

Albert: It means bars, booze, and ... everything!

Harold: But I don't know if I'm ready for this. I don't mean to be chicken, but ...

Albert: ... Harold, dear, at 31, chicken is something that you definitely are not! Come on. Put yourself in mother's place. I'll straighten you out, pardon the profanity.

Harold: Now hold on, Al. I'm not sure that I want to go through with this. After all, I have my reputation to think of.

Albert: Harold, you can keep your reputation, or you can lose it. If you lose it, you may not miss it, and who knows, your new reputation may be better than the old one. Come on. You're only young once, so live it up.

Harold: Well, I don't know.

Albert: (turning to leave) OK. If you don't think you're ready, I'm not going to push it. I guess I'll get going.

Harold: Al, wait. It's not that I'm not ready, but this is something brand new to me. I know where you're coming from ...

Albert: ... But you don't know where you're going, right?

Harold: Right.

Albert: Well, the only way to find out is to come out. How about it?

Harold: This really tops Monopoly, huh?

Albert: It's your "Get Out Of Jail Free" card, Dear.

Harold: (thinking it over) ... OK, Al ... I'll do it. Come on. I'll get my coat.

Albert: Hold it, long, lean and luscious. Not so fast. You're not ready, yet. We've got to make a few changes.

Harold: Well, what's the story? What should I wear? How should I act? What should I do?

Albert: That's where we come in ... Kevin ... George ... Barry???

(enter three chorus boys. Number one is extremely Nelly; number two is dressed in leather; number three comes straight from Gentlemen's Quarterly)

Kevin: You can change your appearance. A plane awaiting clearance. Sparkles and jewels for days. But you gotta have a gimmick. If you want to get good lays, your pants should be much tighter.

Hair a little lighter.

Maybe a scarf around the head.

But you gotta have a gimmick.

If you want to get in bed.

You can — (limp-wristed swish)

You can

My secret plan can't miss.

Me, I — and I — and I —

But I use a lot of swish.

I'm a little Nelly.

But when I'm on my belly

They say I'm a fabulous trick.

My swish technique is foolproof.

So use it, girl, and use it quick!

'Swish Them Hips'

George: He can (imitating Kevin) He can — he can —

But that becomes a pain.

Me, I — (snaps a chain) and I —

and I —

But I do it with a chain.

You could be much better

if you were wearing leather.

The Queens would be around you for days.

'Cuz leather kind of lovin's

The only kind of love that pays.

Barry: They can (combination of first two) they can — they can —

But that went out last week.

You can — (refined version of first two) you can — you can —

Just as long as you look chic.

A jumpsuit from Cassini!

Cardin cologne is dreamy.

The fashion world is yours to command.

You need a little style.

If you want to take a stand.

All 3: You're up above the others.

Apart from all your brothers.

A style you can claim as your own.

Kevin: If you'd like a lover

Swish between the covers.

George: Softer than a feather

Feel the touch of leather.

Barry: Success is to the bearer

The one who's debonaire.

(The three exit as quickly as they entered)

Mint Bar's Pre-Halloween party.

(Photo by Marsh)

Harold: Wow! That was something.

Where did they come from?

Where did they go?

Albert: Hmm? Oh they're mine. I belong to the local Stud Bank. Kevin's around for a rainy day.

Harold: And the other two?

Albert: They're for days when it's not raining.

Harold: Well, they certainly showed me a thing or two.

Albert: Oh, those were just some little things, except Kevin, of course.

There are many other things to see ... and do!

Harold: Well, I guess I'm coming in!

Albert: Out, Dear. Out! You've really never done this before. What a tragedy for you ... what an opportunity for the girls.

Harold: Girls?? But aren't we talking about ...

Albert: ... Relax Harold. You'll see what I mean ... Oh, ya! You'll be the biggest thing to hit the bars since penicillin. Now get going!

Harold: Can I wear what I have on now?

Albert: Oh, Harold. Didn't my boys teach you anything? Oh, the pains I endure to clean out a closet. Speaking of which, can I see yours?

Harold: (visibly shocked) Albert!!! Come on now. We're just friends!

Albert: Calm down. Honey. I'm talking about your clothes closet. (Harold exits and returns with a few articles of clothing) Hmm.

Not too bad, but we can do better ... if you want to.

Harold: Well, sure. What's the plan?

Albert: Do you have your Master Charge?

Harold: Yes.

Albert: OK, Dear. Grab your plastic, and hang onto your hat ... hat ... yes ... (looking at Harold) maybe a hat would help. Come on ... we're going shopping. (Harold picks up his coat, and they head for the door) Eliza Doolittle: Your Professor Higgins is here ... all I want is a man somewhere. Tall and gorgeous, with lots of hair.

(They exit, closing the door)

"One Night Lover"

One-night-lover; playing games.
Different lover; different time.
Many nights, many lines.
One-night-lover with one-night-name.
One-night-lover; all are the same.

One-night-lover in the bar.
See you sitting and gives you a wink.
Comes over and buys you a drink.
One-night-lover takes you out of the bar.
Drives you away in their brand new car.

One-night-lover playing one-night games.
One-night-lover; one-night-line.
"Thanks for the evening, I had a great time."
Could I ever see you again?
By the way, what is your name?"

One-night-lover; they get what they deserve.
One-night-lover; all are fools.
'cause only fools play a game to lose.
One-night-lover is always free to serve.
That kind of love is not what I deserve.

Are You A Pawn of the Pentagon?

The simple threat of the draft benefits the military. Congressional Manpower Studies consistently show that "draft efforts" result in a significant increase in the number of enlistments. In fact, draft registration is promoted as a recruitment tactic! "Volunteers" for the military are a primary reason for, and the invisible fall-out of, the draft.

In the coming months we can expect to see a ferocious recruitment drive by the military. State legislation under debate requires high schools to submit their seniors' names, addresses and telephone numbers to local military recruiters. Recently, the Department of Defense signed a contract with J.W. Thompson, a national advertising firm, to produce a 45 second film for showing at 283 theaters nationwide that cater to young (15-26) people. Radio and TV ads featuring popular personalities encourage young people to go to their recruiters.

This promotion campaign, including the usual magazine inserts and billboards, constitutes a seriously intensified government effort to foster a notion of the military as a job placement agency, exploits the naivete and energy of our young people, feeds the fear that we are being endangered by a foreign adversary, and further stimulates the country's upsurge in militarism.

Recruitment Methods

Recruitment begins not at the recruiting station, but with a motto. In the 60's the appeal was to male identity; today it's the same only a bit more obscure. "Be all you can be"—permits whatever delusions that the potential recruit may consider desirable: from a tough, compassionate he-man soldier fighting for justice and liberty, to a skilled tradesperson. The message always infers that the military is the place to jump in with both feet and be someone.

Enlisting in the military is no longer a one step process of going to see a recruiter. Now, the potential recruit must also chat with a placement or "guidance counselor" and finally encounter the enlistment contract.

The recruiter, usually a Staff or First Sergeant and, usually the same racial or ethnic background as the community in which he/she is working, determines whether the applicant fulfills general prerequisites for induction: age, schooling, general mental and physical health. The recruiter then elicits what interests the recruit may have and describes compatible job categories in the military.

Once the recruit demonstrates an interest, the recruiter takes the recruit to a guidance counselor (usually a Staff Sergeant) at the Armed Forces Entrance and Examination Station (AFEES). Here the recruit undergoes a series of exams to determine aptitude, interests, and personality assessment. After a physical examination, a contract (Enlistment Option) is drawn up stating the school the recruit desires, the length of time to be committed, and numerous other clauses that are not mutually binding.

Acceptance to schools is based on examinations (before and following induction), availability of schools and, most importantly, military necessity. The military often does not tell the recruit about other requirements that must be met, and recruits failing to fulfill these additional requirements are often recycled to combat positions. The military may, for reasons of its own, violate the terms of the contract. Since 1911, the courts have refused to challenge the military's contract responsibility. Even if the military violates the contract, the recruit is "legally" obligated to fulfill the terms.

Promoting sales, the military too has its "specials"; for example, the Delayed Entry Program (DEP) permits recruits to delay active duty up to a year after signing the contract. With the Veterans' Incentive Program, the government matches the recruit's savings (generally at a 2 to 1 ratio) for college expenses. There is also college ROTC and high school JROTC which do not promise but strongly suggest that upon induction the recruit will receive accelerated promotions.

Counter-Recruitment Projection

Draft counselors and other anti-draft activists would do well to expand our objectives and develop skills as pre-enlistment counselors. In the course of doing this work, we can raise questions with vulnerable recruits to expose the limitations of the contract and military employment. For example, we can ask young people:

* Do you realize that if discharged from the military prior to the full time committed, you could become subject to the draft should it be enacted?

* Do you realize that once you commit yourself to the Delayed Entry Program, you are in fact in the military?

* Do you know whether the schooling or training you want to sign for is a general category or a specific field?

* Does the specific guarantee of schooling also guarantee placement in that field? NO.

* Does the military indicate which jobs are comparable to civilian sector jobs? Yes, The Department of Transportation Code.

* Does this indicator show that military training and experience constitute eligibility for civilian sector jobs? NO.

* What from your perspective is your purpose in the military? From the military's perspective, you are first and foremost a fighting unit.

THE REACTORY

Look to this day,
For it is life,
The very breadth of life.
In its brief course lie all
The realities and varieties of existence,
The bliss of growth,
The splendor of action,
The glory of power —

For yesterday is but a dream
And tomorrow is only a vision.
But today, well lived
Makes every yesterday a dream of happiness
And every tomorrow a vision of hope.

Look well, therefore, to this day.

Survey Stresses Desire for Coalition

Civil/Human Rights, Legislative Alerts, and Community Organization were the areas of concern chosen by Milwaukee gays and lesbians during the events of CELEBRATION '81 in September.

Over 50% of the respondents gave their names and addresses when completing this four part random study. A previous study by Gay People's Union demonstrated similar results. Many indicated a strong desire for some type of coalition development within the lesbian/gay communities.

The first three sections of the survey requested that people rank certain items in a priority setting.

- I. Civil/Human Rights
General Public Education
Police and other Homophobic Harassment
Positive Role Models
Lesbian/Gay Medical Concerns
- II. Legislative Alerts with concern to our needs
Gay/Lesbian Community Center Needed
Lesbian/Gay Medical Clinic Needed
Gay/Lesbian Business Support for Our Community
Religion
- III. Organized Community
Focus on Political Work
Local Publications
Gay Youth
Ageism

Section IV was for other comments. These span a broad spectrum of concerns. They included: Prejudice within the gay community should be addressed; Positive gay role models are essential; inter-racial acceptance; broad based participation in the formation of a coalition; gay/lesbian center with shared space; self defense courses; half-way house needed; gay/lesbian culture; Raise our Self image; Full time administrator for the gay/lesbian community; Awareness that the gay/lesbian community must support gay/lesbian services.

The Forgotten Gourmet

Mix one olive oil soaked sardine, two fresh scallions, three cups of acorn squash, one bay leaf, one tea spoon of hot peppers, two tea spoons of lime juice and a cup of beef gravy. Add garlic, pepper, salt and celery seed to taste. Bake in a micro wave oven for 80 minutes and Viola!!!

If you survive that one, you most certainly will be up for the "Iron Cast Stomach" Award offered yearly by the stomach pumpers of America, Inc.

As with other significant issues, what makes we humans so crazy about food? Why do we want to pickle, stew, braise, fold and flambeau? Now let's wait just a minute. Have you ever watched your neighborhood alley cat or stray dog eat? Are they as fussy as Morris the Cat (pardon us, Morris)?

Why do we pay $10 for a crepe with a name that few can pronounce? Is it true that McDonalds is really being threatened by the Gourmet Society of the world? Is it truer that the "Home of the Whopper" (yuk, yuk, yuk!) is really a front for the Peking society of all bald and paunchy commies?

The next time you head out to one of the finer spots, don't forget to properly snub your nose as you pass the Colonels and don't forget to close your eyes when you pass Zantigo's and George Webbs.

One final note: If we didn't spoil ourselves and bathe ourselves in regal pretention, how would Alka Seltzer survive — more importantly, how would Sammy Davis, Jr. be able to afford a new 135 carat diamond? (Ah, back to food again!)

Silver Screen

By The Armchair Critic

For anyone who cares about cinema, "The French Lieutenant's Woman" is one of those few films that come along that must be seen. Never mind that the screenplay was written by Harold Pinter, one of the foremost playwrights in American theatre. Never mind that reviewers across the country have labeled it 'Glorious,' 'Tempestuous,' 'Shining,' and 'Breathtaking.' Never mind that the English countryside where the film was shot is enough to make you leave home and migrate to the southern coast of Britain. Meryl Streep in the title role is reason enough to see this film.

For those who have not heard of Miss Streep previously, she won an Academy Award for her portrayal in "Kramer vs. Kramer" last season. In one scene she speaks to Charles Smithson, played excellently by Jeremy Irons, of her recent romance with the French lieutenant. As she does so, the entire audience sat transfixed, their hearts going out to the tragic tale she is spinning. They, too, were caught up in her web, as much as Charles himself.

I could find but one small fault with this otherwise excellent film. It is the flux back and forth between the past of Sarah and Charles, with the present of Anna and Mike. For those not familiar with the novel, it is a bit confusing at the start. To clue you in, Anna and Mike are shooting the movie about Sarah and Charles. I found myself strongly desiring the past, with the interludes of the present interrupting my growing attachment to the lives of Sarah and Charles.

You will treasure the opportunity to know Sarah Woodruff, that is unless your movie desires begin and end with the Three Stooges!

Meryl Streep as Sarah Woodruff.

INSIGHTS

By Steve Stahl

In the last issue I briefly discussed the human problem of envy; that tendency that each of us possess to want to be carbon copies of our friends. This time I'd like to discuss the converse of that type of envy: suspicion of people who are different. The belief that we all need to look, think and act the same.

I had a talk with a friend the other day. He was complaining that some of his friends were "changing"—somehow, they were no longer the persons he had come to know and love and he didn't like that. He felt they had "betrayed" his trust by changing views and outlooks on subjects he felt to be highly important.

We've all experienced this type of behavior in our friends; we've all had occasion to wonder if our friends are alright or perhaps we should "sit them down and have a long talk". The fact is that we all tend to get uncomfortable in the face of change. We all crave stability in our lives and get concerned when our ideas and standards are no longer embraced by our friends and co-workers.

A few examples of this might be: mutual friends who suddenly become lovers (and thereby we feel "shut out"), a friend who makes what we feel to be a radical career change or friends who move to another city against our advice. The common thread here is our conviction that we know more about the maintenance and good health of our friends lives than they do. And yet, how many of us are really proud of the way we maintain our own lives? How can we be responsible for others when taking care of ourselves is a full time job? This is not to say that we should all become hermits and break-off all our relationships but rather we should understand that our friends, lovers, etc. have a right and an obligation to take charge of their own lives and futures.

Just as we envy those people who seem to have things we don't, we also tend to expect our friends to envy our "good sense" and let us run their lives. It doesn't work! I've seen examples of this type of thinking work for very short periods of time but I can assure you, in the long run, people must be responsible and accountable for their own decisions and life directions. When we attempt to assume that responsibility for our friends, we are denying their right and their individual humanity. In addition, we are assuming a terrible responsibility for someone else's most precious gift: free will and the right of choice.

I encourage all of us to extend advice to our friends but only when asked for and truly needed. And in the process of wanting to help, we must always understand that people have the right to refuse to follow our advice—and that refusal is not necessarily a reflection of their love and respect for us. How nice this life would be if we'd only let each other be the person they were made to be. Let's all take time to appreciate the intelligence, creativity, individuality, and "good sense" that we all possess.
