passage of several gay-rights planks, including one relating to AIDS research, in the Democratic platform.

Neither Governor Michael Dukakis nor Vice President George Bush aroused much enthusiasm among gays and lesbians in the 1988 elections. In fact, the only candidate who elicited strong support within the organized gay and lesbian community was Rev. Jesse Jackson, whose moving speech at the 1987 March on Washington and consistent inclusion of gays and lesbians in his "Rainbow Coalition" convinced many liberal gay Democrats that he was their best candidate in years.

The 1992 election is a familiar story, with all the Democratic candidates (Clinton, Tom Harkin, Jerry Brown, Paul Tsongas, and Bob Kerrey) coming out in support of gay and lesbian rights early in the primary season. In the general election, of course, Clinton stood out from George Bush and Ross Perot in his consistent promises on gay rights and AIDS.

And what of the 1996 elections? The Republican candidates certainly have little history of support for the community's issues:
Sen. Phil Gramm got elected to the Senate in 1984 in part by attacking his opponent's acceptance of money from a gay rights group. Sen.
Bob Dole can't seem to decide whether he wants to accept gay money in this race. Pat

Buchanan once called AIDS "nature's awful retribution" for gays' "war on nature." Rep.
Bob Dornan is so homophobic his opponents entitled a biography and collection of his quotes
"Shut Up, Fag." And son-of-a-gay Malcolm Forbes, Jr. has yet to take a strong stand in favor of laws that would ensure that no American has to live the kind of sad double life his father lived.

Will gays and lesbians who feel betrayed by Clinton's abandonment on gays in the military and the Colorado case hold their noses and vote to re-elect the president who has taken more pro-gay steps than any other? Or will an independent candidate, perhaps Lowell Weicker or Jesse Jackson, present gays with a choice they can vote for with confidence? This month's primaries and caucuses kick off the election season, so we'll find out soon.

PAST/OUT

BY DAVID BIANCO

Was Bill Clinton the first presidential candidate to openly support gay and lesbian rights?

Gay and lesbian voters in 1992 were energized by then-Governor Bill Clinton's promises on a wide range of community issues, from AIDS to lesbians and gays in the military. Gays and lesbians provided Clinton's election campaign with crucial dollars, volunteers and votes, helping provide the margin of victory in states such as Georgia and Ohio. But the gay and lesbian community has played an active role in many previous presidential campaigns, sometimes with significant support from the candidates.

In fact, the most important gay-rights organization of the 1950s, the Mattachine Society, was originally conceived as a way for gay men to support a presidential candidate: progressive former Vice President Henry Wallace. Gay rights pioneer Harry Hay attempted to organize among the gay men he knew in Los Angeles, and some of them suggested he call their group "Fruits for Wallace" or "Queers for Wallace." Hay instead proposed "Bachelors for Wallace," but the group never really advanced past the idea stage.

Perhaps because of McCarthyism, perhaps because of the lack of an appealing candidate, gays and lesbians as a group largely stayed out of the presidential elections of the 1950s and 1960s. But in 1972 the Democrats nominated a candidate who had publicly supported gay rights as early as 1970 — George McGovern. Many gays and lesbians had worked hard for McGovern during the primaries, and in return, McGovern allowed a convention debate on including a gay-rights plank in the party's platform.

Thus San Francisco gay activist Jim Foster and Buffalo lesbian activist Madeline Davis addressed the convention on national television in support of lesbian and gay rights. Twenty years later many newspapers reported Roberta Achtenberg's 1992 Democratic Convention speech as the first such address by an openly gay person, having apparently forgotten about the remarkable moment in 1972 when Foster told the convention and the nation:

"We do not come to you pleading your understanding or begging your tolerance.... We come to you affirming our pride in our lifestyle, affirming the validity of our right to seek and to maintain meaningful emotional relationships, and affirming our right to participate in the life of this country on an equal basis with every citizen."

Despite his earlier promises (he even ran ads in The Advocate), McGovern later backed off his pro-gay stands under the pressure of a homophobic general public. Sound familiar?

Presidential candidate Jimmy Carter declared support for gay rights early in 1976, and even sent his handsome son Chip to campaign in the Castro during the California primary. A month before the convention, however, he withdrew his support for a gay rights plank, effectively dooming the measure. Though activists threatened that 10,000 gays and lesbians would protest at a rally outside the New York City convention, fewer than a thousand actually showed up. During the general election, incumbent President Gerald Ford fared no better with gay voters, unable to even comment when Michigan gay activists buttonholed him about America's restrictions on gay immigrants.

In 1980, Carter again refused to support a gay-rights plank in the Democratic platform, and much of the gay and lesbian activist vote in the primaries went to Sen. Edward Kennedy. Of course, in the general election Ronald Reagan was the other choice so most voters for whom gay rights was a main issue held their noses and voted for the defeat-bound President.

Early in his campaign for the 1984 Democratic presidential nomination, former Vice President Walter Mondale took the risky step of addressing over 1,000 gay activists at a human rights dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria in New York City. Mondale was received enthusiastically, despite the fact that he never mentioned gay rights in his speech. A 100,000-strong gay-rights march outside the Democratic National Convention that year helped ensure the

From the Desk of Chinequa Advice for the Adverse

Dear Chinequa,

I have a social dilemma. It has to do with this store where I buy all my fashion, fabulous fashions at that. There seems to be a scandal about the company using child labor in foreign countries to produce these fashions. Everything tells me I should stop shopping there, but I would be lost. I try to be socially conscious, and do the right thing. Hey, I just now started drinking orange juice again, and you didn't see me skiing the slopes of Colorado. So, I need your advise, what do I do.

Yours Truly, Clothed By Kids

Dear Clothed,

What a mess! I feel for you on this one. Balancing the scales of political correctness is especially hard for us homos. So you have to step carefully in most cases. But, darling, social consciousness has to stop somewhere, and where better than outside your little chosen hut of fashion? So, here are some hints. First, make sure it's worth it to shop there. Check with an honest friend about the fashionability of the fashions you crave, or send me a pic of your favorite ensemble. Honesty is a gift of mine. Secondly, try leaving a tip for the poor kids next time you shop. I mean, really, if all us homos stop shopping there, they would just be unemployed foreign kids, even worse. How would you sleep? At any rate, keep up the wise use of your dollars, next to the vote, it's the best tools we homosexuals have to make our point.

Yours dearly, Chinequa

Oh Chinny Girl

The trauma I live in, I just finished my last step in my transformation to becoming a woman. That's right, I'm a true blue transsexual. One of the main reasons I went through with the surgery is because of a boy I've wanted since the third grade. Growing up with Denny Mikart was hell, because I could not help but want him. He was captain of the gymnastics team, diving team, and the best cheer-leading squad captain a boy could stare at. I hoped being a woman would find me a way into his heart. So now the time is here, and I'm afraid to approach him. What should I say, where should I start?

Patricia

Dear Pat,

Well, well, well, Chinny spots trouble here. Now, darlin', first of all congrats on a bold move. Got a bad note here for ya though. Now you know I'm not one to repeat gossip, so listen up the first time. Word around the trailer park is that Denny has gone down on every boy he could catch. Now I can say for sure that's not true, cause obviously he didn't get to you. My dear, there were so many clues, but that's another column. I do hope in my heart you were listening to yours before you saw the scissors, because a change like that should never be for someone else. But don't be down, I'm sure with your new anatomy, you will find a straight gymnastics & diving captain. (Yellow lie) Good luck.

SAGE/Milwaukee Holds Public Valentine's Potluck & Tea Dance

On Sat., Feb. 17, 1-5 p.m., at Just Us (807 So. 5th St.), SAGE/Milwaukee (Senior Action in a Gay Environment) will hold its annual "Hearts and Flowers" potluck and tea dance.

Reservations are not required and the event is open to the public. It is, however, a private SAGE party, and the bar will not be open to the public until 5 p.m.

You are asked to bring a dish to pass. Warming ovens will be available. Non-alcoholic beverages, plates, cups and flatware will be provided and a cash bar for alcoholic beverages will be available.

If you do not cook, remember that Milwaukee has lots of fine delis and bakeries. If you can't bring a dish, come anyway since there will be plenty of fine food. This elegant potluck, featuring slow dancing and door prizes, is becoming an event that everyone looks forward to attending.

It is free and not a fund raiser for SAGE, but a hat will be passed, as usual.
