Return of the "L" Word

Za can be a real fucker sometimes. The Girl can be conniving, sneaky, bitchy, whiny, and self-centered. Not that this is a bad thing necessarily. You see, I've been thinking lately of moving my business to another market south of here. Za has taken exception to this line of thought, stating at least two or three reasons why I should remain where I am, usually two to three times louder than my original reasoning.

Anyway, I was drunk. At the bar. Late at night. Go figure. For whatever reason, it was easy to convince our fave bar owner to have an afterbar for only the most loyal and closest of his friends, as well as the rest of us. I don't have any specific memories of this particular party for the ninety minutes: I carried up a case. I kissed all of the bisexuals. I massaged the women and Za. I liked being awake and that was it. It wasn't until our irrepressible host motioned me over to the stove.

Za introduced me to the gentleman standing next to him. The tall, thin gentleman's name was Gerald, an old friend. I said hello. At this point, I could retell the majestic prose with which Gerald swept me up off of my feet that convinced me that he was The One for me. It is unfortunately more accurate to say I zoned, went home with him, and passed out.

The story does get better. Since that auspicious beginning, a lot of has happened between us. We go out a lot, talk a lot, browse the web a lot, cuddle a lot. We have many things in common, and have been pretty steady since the get-go. We spend most of our 'us' time over at his place. To our benefit (and the chagrin of Za), we don't go to the bar as much as I used to.

Let me you tell you about him. Gerald is tall, late thirties, cute, quiet, yet articulate, sexually satisfying, stable, likes my humor and uses his—well, unique—laugh to light up his face regularly. He's his own man: Business owner, independent, carries little baggage with him. He's hard not to like, and I feel lucky to like him even more than that. I am also lucky because he also feels the same about—he's said so in as many words.

Problems? You betcha. Although Gerald gives me a whole new level of wanting to be here, a good chunk of me wants to move; he can't and does not want me to. He wants to keep me in town to the extent he has even mentioned moving in together and helping me work as an independent here in Green Bay. I can appreciate the gestures—almost to the point of taking him up on them—and yet part of me is more than uncomfortable with the offer and the implications of it. I guess what I mean by that is Gerald has his independence, and I would like to have my own. If I accept his terms, I would feel like his 'boy,' even though that wouldn't be the context.

Another area of light contention is the whole

Mark in Madison issue (Check out the old issues—you're probably using them as bookmarks for your Skin Mags!). I am not completely through or over that—and even if that resolves, I still will have that with me. What a joke—I'm the one with baggage this time around! Will ironies never cease?!?!

Most of these things Gerald and I talk about. The few I haven't, well, I'll just show him this article and let him ask me about it and go from there. It's probable he wants to talk about his own things with me, too. I'll give us credit—we're more level than most.

The other night in some post-fornication cuddling, he leaned over and whispered the "L" word in my ear. I said it back, and meant it. It just sounded so—I dunno, right—it made my week. It's been a while since love has happened for me, and I hope it's enough for us.

In the meantime, Gerald and I continue on our way. Za is happy we are together, and is remaining virtually smug-free and supportive of the whole thing (It frightens me!). I hope he doesn't get too upset if two of his friends have stopped showing up at his after bars.

"Are you going to see Melissa?"

I explain that we were not because of the poor acoustics in the arena, having seen her so often in the past, an impossible work schedule, price of tickets. Truth was, my gf and I were recovering from a weekend in Minneapolis to see the Indigo Girls kick off their "Honor the Earth" tour, and it was hard to get psyched for another concert (or anyone other than Emily and Amy Ray!).

A week before the concert I was given two tickets from work, got psyched and quickly altered my schedule. We made plans to meet friends for dinner at the Dragonwick and found ourselves excited about the event. That night I was late getting out of work. As I rushed in the house and began a whirlwind wardrobe change while chanting the itinerary (okay, fifteen minutes to get to the restaurant, okay, okay, half hour to eat, hi honey, okay, concert starts at 7:30 so if we take Mason we'll be fine...) my sweetie plays back a message on the machine that stops me in my tracks.

"What was that?" I ask. "I think we have backstage passes," she replies, and we play back the cryptic message. We are to be in front of the arena at 6:45 to meet a short dark haired man named Danny, who will take us backstage. My mantra turns to "Ohmigod" and our flurry becomes more hectic, our ability to choose clothing evaporates, precious time wasted as we try to decide if we should have her sign anything, and what, and if we have anything to give her for her baby.

We hit the Dragonwick late with a 15 minute window. Neither of us can speak, and we are barely capable of explaining why we must leave early by the time we must go. We are standing in front of the arena with minutes to spare. Danny turns out to be a pleasant man from Island Records who casually walks us into the bowels of the arena with two other gentlemen.

I am not a celebrity monger. The awe that so many feel when meeting actresses, musicians, athletes, is foreign to me. I have difficulty asking for an autograph, not out of shyness, but because it strikes me as selfish. If it is someone I admire, I feel they have already given to me with their art, why ask for more? When Melissa played at the Weidner Center a few years ago, I was not only in the front row, but she knelt in front of me and played while I put my arm around her (soft hair). This did not stun me or change my life.

As we stood in the locker room beneath the arena, I felt numb because of the suddenness. I wanted to say something NOT STUPID. I wished we'd had time to get a gift for the baby. When Melissa was led into the room, I was struck by the realities; she was shorter than you'd think, with tons of stage makeup, poofy hair. She shook our hands, signed our stuff, posed for a picture with us. I didn't say anything memorable. I noticed in her the attributes I find important when meeting anyone for the first time; her eyes were kind and direct, she shook hands sincerely, and she was gracious. I liked her.

We found ourselves ushered back to reality and grabbed a few beers and a pizza before finding our seats. Our backstage passes earned envy from our friends, and we were happy to see that many who had sworn off this concert because of the location had changed their minds. Once the music started and Melissa Etheridge filled the arena as only her voice can, the surprise wore off and we were able to relax and enjoy. The huge screens on either side of the stage allowed a great view from every seat. My excuses for not attending seemed silly. But, considering the way events fell together, I think I should plan NOT to see k.d.lang, or Tracy Chapman, or Bonnie Raitt...

For the past three years, Quest has strived to improve and to grow. Our aim was to supplement the Milwaukee based publications already in existence by bringing you a different voice from our state, one that went beyond the borders of Madison & Milwaukee. We have encouraged writers to contribute to Quest from all parts of the state, but what we have not done to date is give you something for our Lesbian and bisexual womyn readers.

Sue, a member of Northern Womyn has joined our little family to change all that. You can look forward to her contributions on a regular basis.

LEATHER/FETISH

by Papa Joe

OK, OK, you win, the ground is covered with snow, it's cold out and salad shooter commercials are everywhere. It is no longer summer and the bike can be put in storage. Have to admit, this denial thing doesn't work forever.

Sometime back, I asked for suggestions for the naming of this column. I felt the name "Leather Community" seemed limiting to many of those special interests we relate to when we think of our community. "Papa Joe" limits it even further besides implying some sort of Guru status to an old fart who has been around the block too many times. Well, one of you came though with Leather/Fetish. And so it is.

Some of the clubs are planing ahead for next spring and summer. With that in mind, I will repeat the schedule (Quest V3, Iss. 20) that clubs tend to keep. Most of the dates, set in wet concrete, have become established by tradition. Use them as guidelines for your future planning. If your group plans to do something on a schedule, let me and the other clubs know. Having this schedule can save a lot of last minute changes.

- 2nd Saturday of the month - except 3rd Sat in Nov. Oberons bar nite. The following day, Oberons monthly meeting
- 1st Saturday of the month - quarterly - Castaways Bar/club nite. Note, not routinely the same Saturday.
- 4th Sunday regular monthly meeting.
- 3rd weekend in January - Argonauts anniversary cocktail/dinner party
- 3rd weekend in August - Argonauts North Woods, a camp out at the farm
- 2nd weekend in November - Castaways MC anniversary party/run

Still haven't heard from some of the clubs, so expect this list to expand.

Just a whole bunch of stuff to catch up on...

South Water Street Docks is open and doing business as usual - seems someone forgot to pick up and display a license which had been approved and paid for. The bar was closed Thursday night through the weekend only.

Once you've been caught by one of these omissions, you don't get caught again. It happened to me with tobacco licenses.

From Castaways news notes (edited - due to windy writer) - held their 17th anniversary Nov. 8-10, 1996. After registration at the Hotel Wisconsin, they did a beer bust at 1100 Club where $140.00 was raised and donated to the Oberons Children with AIDS Christmas fund. - "Sat. afternoon saw a very funny show. The Castaways and guest "stars" entertained an SRO audience with such favorites as "God Bless America", "Leader Of The Pack", "Sisters" (starring George W and a local columnist who shall remain nameless. Dream "The Impossible Dream" - Kate Smith with pumpkins????

The performers raised $120.00 in tips to be donated to St. Camillus Raphael House.

The wind-down party was at the 1100 Club complete with a traditional condo initiation. As I said last issue, this was one fun weekend.

Sisters preparing for lead roles in Castaways show.

The Firebirds (Boot Camp- Nov. 23) held a very successful St. Camillus "Raphael House" benefit. Unofficial word has it, they raised over $700.00 with the party and auction. Place was jammed - Congrats, guys, keep up the great work.

And speaking of keeping up great work >From Tim Jones, Oberons. Mama Roux club night, Nov. 30., (again somewhat edited) "a fundraiser for Christmas Club for Children with AIDS (C.C.C.A.) was the most successful so far. Gift certificates totalling $300 were donated by the patrons of Mama Roux, who packed the bar along with a substantial showing of our community.

Oberons at Mama Roux's

The final fundraiser for the 1996 C.C.C.A. will be held this Saturday, Dec. 14, at the 1100 Club from 10pm until ??? Raffle prizes donated by area businesses so far include gift certificates for meals & services as well as leather goods ranging from wrist bands to harnesses.

It will be a $5.00 beer/soda bust, and donations are welcome. Anyone wishing to donate items & gift certificates for raffle may drop them off at the 1100 Club (see Tim who works cocktail hours weekdays). Jars for cash donations are located in all the bars who have hosted C.C.C.A.

also from Tim. - - "Special thanks to the 1100 Club for their efforts Thanksgiving Day. The bar hosted its annual free Thanksgiving buffet and collected over $130.00 from donations which will go to the C.C.C.A. fund. Plans are to do the same on Christmas Day.

Holiday Invitational Tournament weekend was one heck of a weekend. The wind-down party at M&M made for a feel good afternoon. Bobo, Larry and Rita made the place rock. Throw in a Packer Bear game and one petite dancing mermaid. Hey, what more could you want?

Saturday Dec 14 evening Castaways Christmas party. Members only there but you can expect to see them later at the 1100 Club for the Oberons final C.C.C.A. benefit.

Sunday Dec 15, 3 PM, Boot Camp Christmas party. Everyone invited.

Plans are firming up relating to the Feb. 1st. leather swap meet and social at the 1100 Club. The Wisconsin Boot Men and the Great Lake Harley Riders, both special interest contact groups, are co-sponsors for these events

Happy Holidays to all. May you know joy and peace this season, in the new year and all the years of your life. Be especially good to yourself, you deserve it.

Love, Papa Joe

How did McCarthyism affect gays and lesbians?

Between 1950 and 1954, U.S. Senator Joseph McCarthy (R-WI) constantly made headlines with his attacks on communists and other "subversives" that he claimed had infiltrated the entire federal government. Although McCarthy was only one of many public figures who crusaded against "anti-American" employees of the federal government, his attention-grabbing stunts and blowhard persona helped lend his name to the phenomenon now known as McCarthyism.

Although less well-known than the campaign against communists, the McCarthy era also saw a widespread push to root out "perverts" from government service - and the overwhelming majority of those "perverts" were lesbians and gay men. About two weeks after McCarthy's first media splash in which he alleged that hundreds of communists were working in the State Department, a top State Department official indicated that nearly a hundred of his agency's employees had resigned amid concern that they were security risks, adding "Most of these were homosexuals."

This revelation caused a media stir, appearing on the front page of the next day's New York Times and causing many, both inside and outside the government, to ask just how widespread was the infiltration of sex perverts within the ranks of government. Few questioned the assumption that homosexuals serving in government positions posed a threat to national security - whether through the risk of blackmail or through the presumed weakness and incompetence of "moral degenerates."

Although other legislators, particularly the prominent Republican Nebraska Senator Kenneth Wherry, took the lead in investigating the presence of homosexuals in government, McCarthy himself also pointed fingers. For example, he complained to a Senate subcommittee that one gay man had been protected from losing his State Department job because of political pressure from the Democrats.

Throughout 1950, the investigations continued, and dozens of lesbians and gay men lost their jobs each month. In December of that year, the Senate Subcommittee on Investigations released its report on the "Employment of Homosexuals and Other Sex Perverts in Government," which charged that gays were generally unsuitable for government jobs - in part because they enjoy each other's company and thus "it is almost inevitable that [they] will attempt to place other homosexuals in government jobs." Worse, the report continued, homosexuals' emotional instability "makes them susceptible to the blandishments of the foreign espionage agent."

This report and the other accusations of the McCarthy era were turned into concrete homophobic policies as the 1950s wore on. The FBI began surveillance of gay bars and social networks, while the Post Office began keeping track of homosexuals by noting the subscribers to physique magazines and gay pen-pal clubs. Soon after Eisenhower took office in 1953, he issued Executive Order 10450, which made "sexual perversion" acceptable grounds for firing any government employee, from the military to the Library of Congress. According to one estimate, as much as 20 percent of the American work force was subject to McCarthy-era rules that could allow summary dismissal because of homosexuality.

McCarthy's public humiliation and censure in 1954 (which involved his closeted gay aide Roy Cohn's mendacity and audacity in spending public funds) ended his role as the demagogue of the decade. But the anti-gay policies of the McCarthy era, along with their inevitable psychological effects on the fragile gay and lesbian community of the time, long outlived the public career of their founder.

The greatest irony of this historical episode is the fact that McCarthy was often accused, McCarthy-style, of having been gay himself. A bachelor for 45 years until he married a member of his staff in 1953, McCarthy's sexuality was the subject of innuendo both during his life and since. At the height of McCarthy's power, a newspaper publisher who had previously tangled with the senator wrote, "It is common talk among homosexuals in Milwaukee who rendezvous at the White Horse Inn that Senator Joe McCarthy often engaged in homosexual activities. The persons in Nevada who listened to McCarthy's radio talk thought he had the queerest laugh. He has. He is."

It is not a coincidence that those who were most feared in the McCarthy era were communists, homosexuals and Jews. The three groups share key characteristics, which posed a threat to an insecure nation at the outset of the Cold War. Communists, homosexuals and Jews are not always easy to spot. They may conceal their political opinions, masquerade as straight, or change their last names, but heterodox they remain - often discreetly meeting with fellow travelers. Less than two decades after members of these groups were sent to concentration camps on the other side of the Atlantic, they again found themselves thrown together, this time in a vicious campaign of innuendo, slander, and attack on their livelihoods.

SAGE/Milw. Launches Fund Drive to Move SAGE Center Forward!

The SAGE Board of Directors has launched a fund drive to get the establishment of a SAGE Center on track, and notes the organization has 501.c.3 tax status, which allows all donations to be deductible on both federal and state tax returns.

The December newsletter for SAGE reports: "After looking for over a year for a suitable site for a SAGE Center, when one was located recently, the Board determined that we did not have enough funds to prepare the site, furnish it and pay the high rent for a long enough period to insure the project's success. The Board has located another site that we feel we can use on a temporary basis as we phase in the programs that will ultimately be included in a Center. We are negotiating a rental and hope to make an announcement in the near future on same, perhaps using it one night a week."

Tax deductible donations may be sent to SAGE/Milwaukee, PO Box 92482, Milwaukee, WI 53202. If mailed by December 31, they'd qualify as deductible on returns due April 15, 1997.

In other SAGE news, notice is given that all officers terms expire Jan. 8; nominations are now in order (interested? speak up!). Annual memberships also expire Jan. 8; renewal notices hit the mail box shortly.

Insight Into Hawaii Court Ruling on Same Sex Marriage!

The recent ruling in Hawaii barring the denial of marriage licenses to same-sex couples will likely be upheld by the Hawaii Supreme Court, according to Steve Sanders, assistant to the dean of Indiana University's College of Arts and Sciences. This semester, Sanders has been teaching IU's first course examining the gay and lesbian political movement. In October, his students had the opportunity to hear about the Hawaii case first-hand from co-counsel Evan Wolfson of the Lambda League Defense and Education Fund.

"The Hawaii Supreme Court had already ruled, in 1993, that the denial of marriage licenses to same-sex couples violated the Hawaii state constitution, which has an equal rights amendment that the federal constitution does not," Sanders said. "The Hawaii Supreme Court agreed with the argument that this was a matter of sex discrimination, because it makes assumptions about gender roles.

"The state then had to show it has what is called a 'compelling interest' in continuing such discrimination. That's a very stiff legal test. Most experts believe the Hawaii Supreme Court will agree with the judge who ruled that the state had failed to meet that test."

Even though same-sex couples likely will be able to obtain marriage licenses in Hawaii in the near future, the Defense of Marriage Act (DOMA) passed by Congress and signed by President Clinton this fall says other states do not have to recognize those marriages.

"Future constitutional challenges will probably be based on the argument that the Defense of Marriage Act violates the full faith and credit clause of the U.S. Constitution," Sanders said. "DOMA seems to go against the constitutional provision that says all states are obligated to honor each other's contracts and other legal actions. Thus, opposite sex couples already take for granted that a marriage valid in one state is valid in others."

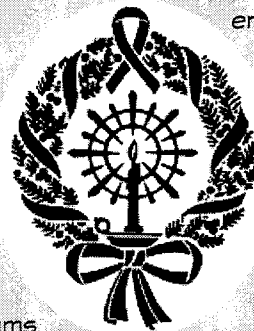

Sanders maintains a World Wide Web site that
