from the publisher...

It has been my distinct pleasure to bring you Quest every two weeks for the past three years. Our next issue will be the last of year three and at long last we are going to skip a week and take a long needed break. We do the same in the following issue so we can be back on our regular schedule. I will be using the extra time to make a few changes in the magazine, clean up some paperwork that has been piling up and to take a one week vacation; my first in a couple of years.

When we first started Quest our idea was to fill a niche that was not fully served by Wisconsin Light or In Step Magazine. We wanted to be an entertainment guide "bar rag" and we wanted to try and give more coverage to areas outside Milwaukee. Instead of competing with the other magazines we wanted to be a compliment to them.

We are especially flattered that some of our ideas have been imitated by our sister publications from time to time. We have ourself imitated things we really liked in publications from New York, London and San Fransisco to name just a few. You can be sure we will continue to evolve into a better publication as time and money permits.

We keep our cost down by printing the publication ourself. We own most of the equipment needed to produce Quest and we choose to employ people from the Les-bi-gay community wherever possible; however we don't reverse discriminate either. We are using local authors to write all but one of our columns, and we are slowly growing, adding more space for these columns and those to come.

It takes our advertisers to keep us going! You can help! If your favorite bar is not advertising or sending us free calendar information and you enjoy Quest, please ask them to consider us. Your encouragement will do more than any salesmen could do. If you have any suggestions about what you would like added or changed about Quest please write us. We would love to hear from you.

Sincerely, Mark Mariucci
Publisher

I am the Grinch Man (Cukoo Catchoo) by Jess Littleman

Dateline: December 20, 1996

Some people say colds are the result of a lack of sleep, poor eating, and stress. For me, a cold simply times itself to arrive three days before the busiest week of the year, causing me to toss and turn, lose my appetite, and to try a brain seizure on for size. Case in point: This last Sunday. I feel fine, I feel fine, I feel fine...five o'clock Sunday BAM!!! Runny nose, fever, chills, the whole majilla. This all occurs, of course, right before the busiest week of my year, and a scant five days before I attend a good friend's wedding half way across the country. ARRRUGH!!!

(I realize I am whining. Tough shit. After forty-eight hours of a steady diet of Dristan, NyQuil, TheraFlu and Halls, I feel hung over. You have been warned...continue reading at your own risk.)

Actually, I'm playing hooky by writing this article. Right now, I'm in the middle of an extended-length Board Meeting. I lost interest ten minutes in, so I switched windows on my laptop to my word processor and started this installment.

Blink, Blink, Blink the cursor in the corner of the screen taunts, daring me to strike the keys that form words, sentences and paragraphs, that one particular combinations that represents my thoughts accurately.

I draw a blank.

I want to finish this article and get on with other things so I can enjoy the wedding and Xmas, if at all possible. The 'to do' list on my other screen, however, just seems to grow and grow, and a large part of me wants to just cancel all plans and crawl into bed for the balance of December.

This has always been a difficult time of year for me, the period starting with Thanksgiving right through to Valentine's. Just thinking about trying to get through it again this year makes me wish I had the type of job where I could relocate for four months to Cancun.

Excuse me...time to swallow another cough drop...

Dateline: December 26

Ok, ok, ok, I'm going to try to take another stab at this article. Za has already informed me that I could skip an issue if I wanted. Trick question: I want to finish this line of thought, but I keep on drawing blanks. Blink, blink, blink. I'm trying to figure out why I'm procrastinating to the nth degree on this article. I've found a lot of excuses: no time due to the holidays, lack of material (good relationship can lead to a dry spell of creativity, I've discovered), and my personal fave: Jerald reading this article makes me nervous to write some personal things I would otherwise have the freedom to express. Hey, it sounded a lot better at three in the morning!

So the original question remains: Why am I about as much of a fan of November, December, and January as I am of Earth, Wind and Fire? (This reference makes a lot more sense when you realize I'm watching Suzanne Somers host VHOne.)

As I get older and look back, I can see a lot of the reasons why I get melancholy throughout the holidays. Basically, I've always grinchd out this time of year, one way or another. I'd do it by getting into yelling matches with mom about proper holiday attire ("I want you to wear the monogrammed v-neck sweater I bought you!" "Only if I can wear the fluorescent orange belt that goes with my black skintight parachute pants"); disappearing into an arcade with the money I was supposed to spend on some relative's gifts and playing Donkey Kong for nine hours before being discovered by dad; spending part of winter break in a psych ward under surveillance after a botched 'S' attempt with pills and booze; wondering if this is going to be the last New Year's spent with mom if the tests showed the cancer wasn't malignant. Ho Ho Ho.

Now I'm thoroughly depressed. I is out...

This is getting silly. The ultimate in procrastination, I mean. This year so far, I hate to admit after all of my bellyaching, was very nice. I had a great time at the wedding. Xmas was very lackey. Everyone enjoyed each other's company. J and I are exchanging holiday gifts in a week or two, and we've decided to skip out of town on a half-business, half pleasure trip out West.

So, what was the deal exactly? I think a lot of pleasant things happened this year, not to mention a shorter buying season and a lot of good luck. I also let my guard down and let myself remember the good memories of the time. I recalled one year when our family decided to 'hole up' and spend the days alone in the house. No relatives, no traveling, no phones. Just the four of us and the cat. I also remember the year at school when I stayed with friends and relatives in Denver—it was kind of nice to know we all chose to be together that year.

So it's about time for The Moral of This Story. Should I reject my old ways and embrace the season and decorate trees and buy little gifts and make fruit-cakes a la Ms. Stewart for all I know? Hell no. I like my Grinch tendencies in as far as using them as protection from the commercial and sugar-coated aspects of the days. But maybe I'll start relaxing a bit so I can enjoy the time I get to spend with friends and loved ones. I think that's important for all, especially those of us who may not have the option of spending these days with family, the one you love, or both.

So I'm in the process of sending this document, nibbling on Jerald's ear, and deciding which airline to call first to leave for on Vacay. Life is good. Let's all hope for the best in 1997.

My Head In Her Lap

by Sue Zip

Wednesday morning I found myself reclined in the lap of a none-too-careful dental assistant, trying to grip the arm rests casually as she fumbled and jabbed my tender tissues. The usual tooth scraper had the day off and I was soon longing for her gentle touch and friendly banter. Unable to distract myself with my current company, I found myself remembering Jennifer, the lovely and ever-charming woman who helped my orthodontist and whose sweetness had unleashed wild teenage hormones.

I was thirteen when I first realized the intimacy of this mouth-cleaning position. In my first visit, Jennifer lowered the dental chair and I was enveloped by her sweet fragrance, a heady apple blossom which made me forget it was the dead of winter. She chatted and laughed easily and when I looked at her, I saw up her sleeve to the lacy cup of her bra and my palms were immediately drenched. Everything about her was mesmerizing and on consequent visits I was torn between trying to get her to laugh and fearing she would catch on to my attraction. Her proximity was maddening. When she would reach across me her scent was dizzying. I loved the orthodontist!

Ironically, about every third visit I had the misfortune of having my mouth brutalized by an older woman who leaned her entire weight on my arm while she worked and seemed to use the dental pick against my gums to maintain her balance. I experienced more white pain from her than from any drilling, fillings or tooth pulling. In some demented way, the uncertainty of which woman would work on my teeth served to send me into a swoon whenever Jennifer walked in.

Years later I worked in a mall and tried to distribute my frequent haircuts evenly among salons. I was delighted during one such hair-shortening experience to spy a beautiful woman working there and was sure to place my next appointment with her. One month later, she was giving me a shampoo and returning my surface flirting. Older now, I was quite comfortable with my attraction and adept at looking up womens' sleeves. I was unprepared, however, for her relative nudity (beneath her blouse, that is) and silently chastised my reflection for blushing. Throughout the haircut she leaned against the back of the chair, or my arm, or the insides of my legs, and to this day, I'm not sure if she wasn't just working me for a big tip. If she was, it certainly worked. She cut my hair three times and then disappeared.

Such experiences have led me to expect more from my dentist appointments than what unfolded Wednesday. To have my teeth cleaned by a woman who didn't increase my heart rate was a letdown. Makes me want a refund.

LEATHER/FETISH

by Papa Joe

I made it through another year. It sure went fast. The not-too-pleasant spring (remember PrideFest) made the winter drag and then, when summer came, within days it seemed like it was fall. Time sure speeds up as you get older. By the time I hit ??y something, it will be a blur.

As promised last issue, details of The Great Lakes Harley Riders (GLHR) and the Wis. Boot Mens' (WBM) February 1 Leather Swap Meet at the 1100 Club, are here. The event is the long-time-incoming idea of Bob G. and done in cooperation with the Castaways MC, who traditionally have the first Saturday of the month for their events and whose home bar is the 1100 Club as well as the Oberons. Here are details.

a. Swap meet starting at 3 pm and lasting until at least 10 pm. Vendors are allowed to stay until closing. There is no entrance or setup charge. Visa and MasterCard accepted by some vendors.

b. Beer Bust ($5) hosted by WI Boot Men, with door prizes starting at 10 pm and lasting until closing. Several demonstrations are planned during this time.

c. After hours party hosted by the Castaways MC. $5 invitations needed to enter will be available during the beer bust and not at the party.

d. Afternoon and evening Spaghetti feed available from the Oberons.

You guys wanting to sell can do it two ways -- set up your own table or consign the item(s) to GLHR/WBM's table. There is no charge or fee to do either, but do it in advance - it's first come-first serve. There are no restrictions as to what you can sell, but try to keep it related to leather, bikes, boots and other butch things. Donate your old drag gowns, wigs and shoes to Ma Barker instead of trying to sell them there.

To my knowledge, this type event is happening for the first time ever in the upper Midwest. It will be hard to predict what to expect, but you can expect a lot of good bargains. I know four people who are looking forward to this event just to part with leathers, boots, etc they've tired of or outgrown. This is the place to be for men who like to accessorize with leather, boots, Harleys and other studdly stuff.

According to the event's coordinator, Bob G, men from Illinois and Minnesota are expected and there are three confirmed vendors.

The next day is the 1100 Club's Club Appreciation Day Buffet. Members from all the clubs in the upper Midwest have been invited. It's free and Mike hopes you (as a club) will let him know how many might be there. He just doesn't want to run short of food.

Both the 1100 Club and GLHR/WBM hope to make the two days an annual event.

Saturday, Jan. 11, the Oberons will be doing their monthly club night at the 1100 Club. The Obies, who have not had a home bar since the Wreck Room closed, have been doing their 2nd Saturday of the month club night at other bars with the theme of "Homeless in Milwaukee." This will their first club night since they have announced the 1100 Club as their home bar; the theme is "Home, but not alone."

Bob G. GLHR & WBM Feb. 1 swapmeet coordinator.

The following Saturday, The Argonauts of WI will be celebrating their twenty-third anniversary with a cocktail and dinner party in Green Bay. This year, they also scheduled activities for Fri. and Sun. for those who come early or stay over.

It would be a good idea to have reservations before you go. The AOW's have reserved a block of rooms at a nearby motel. You can call Glen B (housing director) at (414) 435-8406 or Steve J (anniversary director) at 494-5029.

Just got off the phone with Steve, who said the AOW's food drive for Center Project clients went well. He wanted to express thanks to all who participated and contributed to make it a success. Also said they (AOW) are talking about doing in again at Easter time.

While on the subject of Green Bay, Mark Mariucci, exalted and mighty publisher of Quest is trying to take some time off. To do so, he needs to make the next two issues three-weekers. So folks, if you have announcements or plans you want published for the rest of January and most of February, get it to me ASAP...

I am running out of space for this issue, but I wanted to record my opinion of what appeared to me to be out and out police harassment that a number of you and I witnessed at the Boot Camp. I don't know why they have a hard-on for Si or the Boot Camp, but they sure seem to. Is it because he has "sex furniture" on the patio? Yes, Si told me an officers called the saw buck patio seating sex furniture. (You talk about kinky!)

Si will be the first to tell you that over the years he has been hit with some legit citations and some were questionable. This time, you gotta wonder what the police and/or the City of Milwaukee do for kicks.

There may be a law on the books about having proper licensing to play music and there may be some debate as to the interpretation of said law. But, when the police Wednesday, on a highly questionable "fishing trip," found only a missing music license which may or not apply, have to check it out before issuing a citation, go to the squad car, and after about ten minutes, drive off, you and I would assume they got the clarification they needed and dropped the matter.

NOT SI. He knew they would be back and more than likely, on Friday, just about the time the bar got busy, bearing a citation that would probably close the bar for the weekend just like they did at SWS Docks on Thanksgiving. One step ahead of our great protectors of morality and speech, Si, who already knew he did not need that license, got an interpretation from the City Attorney, a copy of the Statutes, and waited. They came right on time and as hard as he tried, they told him if he didn't turn off the music, they would take his equipment and issue the citation. Si complied.

From there, while the cute officer stayed behind the one end of the bar, the other one dug through everything taking Honcho and Drummer mags, claiming Si was selling explicit material.

Si was issued two citations that night, one about the music and the other about the mags. The music one was withdrawn a couple of hours later, after Si landed at precinct headquarters. The cops and all of us know what a judge will do with the other.

There ought to be a way to make cops accountable for their actions and stop them from using a badge to nit pick. Even us queers have civil and human rights.

I could go on for days, but am over my word limit. Maybe more next time.

The evening of January 13, at the M&M Club (upstairs), you have chance to hear your new Chief of Police address the Gay community. Be there!

Later, Dude

P.S.: The clientele at the Boot Camp was having quite a chuckle during the raid. One guy commented that it would have been a lot funnier if there were dog turds in the tip buckets.

PAST/OUT

BY DAVID BIANCO

January 2, 1965 (32 years ago this week): Ministers associated with San Francisco's Council on Religion and the Homosexual hold a news conference to denounce police tactics against gays and lesbians

What was the Council on Religion and the Homosexual?

In 1964, four years before the first lasting gay church was founded, a group of liberal Protestant ministers - mostly heterosexual - began to advocate for gay and lesbian rights in San Francisco and elsewhere. This group of passionate, courageous men and women, known as the Council on Religion and the Homosexual, played a key role in undermining the previously monolithic attitude of organized religion in America toward gays and lesbians.

The central figure in the founding of the council was Ted McIlvenna, a young Kansas City minister and social worker who was brought to San Francisco in 1962 by the legendary Rev. A. Cecil Williams, of Glide Memorial Methodist Church. Williams, well-known for his civil rights activism, charged McIlvenna with ministering to the large runaway youth population of the Tenderloin district in which Glide was located. McIlvenna soon realized that issues of gay identity were paramount in the troubles of the young people to whom he reached out, and asked for help from the spectrum of homophile organizations then in operation in San Francisco. Some protested that they couldn't deal with anyone under the age of 21, and others refused to work with organized religion. But eventually McIlvenna learned of the difficulties and discrimination faced by San Francisco's gay and lesbian residents - and he began to share what he learned with other ministers.

In May 1964, a group of 16 ministers from a variety of denominations and cities met with gays and lesbians in the Bay Area, toured gay bars and cruising spots, and learned all about homosexuality. In the context of the tumultuous 1960s, in which liberal Protestantism was expanding its role in civil rights and the social gospel, ministering to gays and lesbians with an open mind was seen as a logical next step. In December 1964, a group of these ministers joined with homophile leaders to form the Council on Religion and the Homosexual, which would work to change attitudes toward gays and lesbians among religious individuals and groups.

As its first public event, the CRH planned a New Year's Eve costume ball, designed to raise funds for its future operations. Unseasoned by the gay and lesbian community's history of police harassment, the ministers involved with planning the event met twice with the San Francisco Police to extract assurances that the ball would be unmolested by law enforcement. The gay and lesbian co-planners, taken aback by the fact that the police now knew when and where the event would take place, took steps to prepare the party-goers for a possible police raid, which the ministers assured them would not happen. The ministers were wrong.

The night of the ball, the police were out in full force, shocking the ministers with their blatant harassment of the party-goers. One police officer even told a clergyman who attended the ball, "We'll uphold God's laws if you won't." All 600 party-goers (many of whom were in full drag or other costumes) were photographed and filmed, police entered the hall several times to "inspect the premises," and four of the organizers were arrested.

The event marked the first time many of the clergy involved with the CRH really understood the extent of the harassment faced by gays and lesbians. Having witnessed what one minister called "intimidation, broken promises, and obvious hostility" to the party-goers, many CRH members began to see the political aspects of what they had previously seen as a religious issue. They began their response by holding a press conference at Glide on January 2, in which they described what they had seen and attacked the police's tactics. Sympathetic press coverage and pressure on elected officials led directly to a reduction in anti-gay harassment by the San Francisco police.

The New Year's Eve ball has often been described as a turning point in the maturation of San Francisco's gay and lesbian community - which it was. But it also led to an intensification of work on behalf of gays and lesbians by the mostly straight clergy who helped organize the ball in the first place. The CRH in San Francisco helped organize election forums in which candidates for public office had to answer questions about the treatment of gays and lesbians in the city. They also helped set up a 24-hour hotline to assist victims of police brutality. Perhaps more importantly, they helped organize similar councils in other cities such as Los Angeles, Seattle, and Dallas - and began to advocate for theological and policy changes within their own Protestant denominations as well. By the time Metropolitan Community Church (the first lasting gay church) was founded in 1968, strong voices for compassion and tolerance had already been heard within most mainline Protestant denominations, and primarily from heterosexuals like the clergy who organized the CRH.
