PAST/OUT

BY DAVID BIANCO

February 4, 1915 (84 years ago this week): In Chicago, Edith Lees Ellis, wife of sex researcher Havelock Ellis, delivers a historic lecture defending homosexuality.

Who were Havelock and Edith Lees Ellis?

British researcher Havelock Ellis is remembered in gay history as the man who made "sexual inversion" a household word. What is less well known is that Ellis, who was heterosexual, became intrigued with the topic because his wife, Edith Lees Ellis, was a lesbian.

Though Havelock Ellis (1859-1939) was trained as a doctor, he never practiced medicine. Instead, he made his living writing treatises on topics that complemented his socialist politics. In his first book, The New Spirit (1890), for example, Ellis spelled out his thoughts about the relationship between men and women. While he abhorred the militancy of the suffrage movement, Ellis's belief that "the average level of women's intelligence is fully equal to that of men's" was unusual for his day.

The book caught the attention of Edith Lees (1861-1916), who traveled in the same socialist circles as Ellis. Friends introduced them in 1890, and Lees and Ellis quickly became close friends. No physical attraction, however, seemed to develop between them. In fact, their sexual passions were for other people. A short time before he met Lees, Ellis had been involved with novelist Olive Schreiner, who left him for another man. Lees's intimate attachments had primarily been with women. What prompted Ellis and Lees to marry in 1891 despite their lack of sexual attraction for each other seems to have been a common interest in creating an ideal socialist marriage. As Ellis later put it, their union was an "affectionate comradeship, in which the specific emotions of sex had the smallest part, yet a union ... able to attain ... a passionate intensity of love."

The Ellises had separate incomes and separate residences, though they spent part of each year together. Lees Ellis had a small inheritance, but she also supported herself by giving lectures on feminist topics, which were subsequently printed and sold as pamphlets. In the mid-1890s, she began writing fiction and plays, while Ellis started work on his seven-volume opus, Studies in the Psychology of Sex.

During the months when she lived away from her husband, Lees Ellis had a succession of "good friends," women whom Ellis soon realized were her lovers. Within a few years of their marriage, Ellis, too, began having extramarital affairs. Despite the fact that the Ellises chose an open marriage, their correspondence reveals a fair amount of jealousy on both of their parts.

In his autobiography, Ellis acknowledged the impetus for his most famous research, which he began in 1892. "I had found," he wrote, "that some of my most highly esteemed friends were more or less homosexual (like Edward Carpenter, not to mention Edith)." Ellis's desire to understand his wife's behavior and to "obtain sympathetic recognition for sexual inversion" compelled him to collaborate with John Addington Symonds on a massive study of homosexuality in men and women. Symonds, a gay man, had written a historical treatise on same-sex love in ancient Greece and amassed a large number of case studies on homosexuality. He had not, however, done any research on lesbians. In order to include women in the study, Ellis interviewed his wife (who appeared in the book as "Miss X," speaking frankly about her lesbian likes and dislikes) and her circle of lesbian friends.

Symonds died in 1893, before the work was completed, and his family fought to have his name and the historical essays he contributed removed from the book before publication. As a result, Sexual Inversion (1897), with its 27 case studies of men and six of women, was published under Ellis's name alone. Written primarily for doctors and lawyers, it was the first book in English to treat homosexuality as neither a disease nor a crime but as a naturally occurring phenomenon. Ellis was also the first researcher to consider lesbians worthy of scientific study.

Like her husband, Lees Ellis became a defender of homosexuality. On a lecture tour of the United States, she delivered a much-publicized lecture on sex at Chicago's Orchestra Hall on February 4, 1915. "It is our duty," she maintained, "to see to it that equality of opportunity ... is given alike to the normal and the abnormal men and women in our midst." Ever since she was 18, Lees Ellis boldly admitted, "I have studied woman and I have loved her." She ended her oration with a passionate call for "a new love world."

Though it was a historic moment, Lees Ellis's lecture drew harsh criticism from Margaret Anderson, a lesbian who edited the Chicago-based journal, The Little Review. Anderson was angry that Lees Ellis had been so vague and cautious in her remarks, and she took the initiative to write the first militant defense of lesbianism ever published in this country, an editorial titled "Mrs. Ellis's Failure."

For Lees Ellis, who had been in shaky health for several years, the physical and emotional strain of the lecture tour was too much. She was also bothered by gossip about her husband's affair with birth control activist Margaret Sanger. Lees Ellis suffered a nervous breakdown that spring, and, after a suicide attempt and hospitalization, she died in 1916. Ellis spent the year following his wife's death faithfully chronicling their unusual marriage, a frank account that he would only allow to be published after his death.

Rep. Tammy Baldwin on Wisc. Public TV's "In the Life" Tues., Feb. 9, 11 p.m.

Newly-elected Congresswoman Tammy Baldwin (D-Wisc.) will be featured on "In the Life," a public television series spotlighting current events in the gay community. She will appear Tuesday, Feb. 9, at 11 p.m.

In addition to being Wisconsin's first woman in the House of Representatives, Baldwin is serving in the Congress as the first open lesbian and as the first openly gay non-incumbent ever elected, having won her seat with 53% of the vote last November.

Also tentatively scheduled (for Thurs., March 4, 11 pm) on Wisconsin Public Television is "Out of the Past," a program on gay history.

Hate Crimes Conference To Be Held in Madison on Tuesday, March 2! Welcome!

U.S. attorneys for the eastern and western districts of Wisconsin, Thomas P. Schneider and Peggy A. Lautenschlager, respectively, have teamed up with Wisconsin attorney general James E. Doyle, the FBI and others to hold a conference - "Coming Together: A Wisconsin Response to Hate Crimes."

It will be held at the Monona Terrace Convention and Community Center in Madison on Tuesday, March 2, 9 a.m. to 4:15 p.m. The conference is for educators, law enforcement, prosecutors, community leaders, religious leaders and concerned citizens.

"We believe that the prevention of hate crimes must be a top priority for our state. Hate crimes are particularly heinous because they are directed not only toward the victim, but toward entire segments of the population. Hate crimes often escalate from individual conflicts and can invite imitation and retaliation," they said in a joint statement. "The conference day should offer an excellent opportunity for a meaningful discussion on how to prevent hate crimes and how to respond when bias-motivated crimes take place."

Registration is due by Feb. 22: $30, checks to be made out to Law Enforcement Coordinating Committee or LECC, and forwarded to the U.S. Attorney's Office, PO Box 1585, Madison, WI 53701 (Attention: Myra Longfield - 608/250-5461). The fee includes a continental breakfast, lunch, breaks, conference materials and parking.

Action Wisconsin Outlines State's Participation in "Equality Begins At Home"

Members of Wisconsin's LGBT community will have the opportunity to participate in the largest, coordinated grassroots networking, organizing and lobbying effort in the history of the Gay civil rights movement in the United States in plans adopted by the board of directors at their Jan. 17 meeting in Madison.

"Equality Begins At Home" (EB@H) is a year-long project created and sponsored by the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force (NGLTF) with particular emphasis on EB@H week, March 21-27.

The Action Wisconsin board approved a three-point EB@H program, including the "Sweeten 'Em Up" lobby day efforts to be held Wed., March 24, in Madison.

Have a Heart Sat., Feb. 13!

Famous and familiar names will grace this year's Have A Heart silent auction items and community service awards, presented Sat., Feb. 13 at Liberty Hall, Kimberly. It's the 8th annual AIDS fundraiser dinner and silent auction to benefit the AIDS Resource Center of Wisconsin.

"Auction items are pouring in, including an autographed Green Bay Packer football, a script from 'Chicago Hope' and a cast photo from star Mark Harmon," reports Stan Kocos, ARCW regional director.

Pieces of "heart art" for the annual silent auction, crafted by famous artists, include contributions from Sally Struthers, Betty White, Judd Hirsch, John Lithgow, Grace Slick, Katie Couric and Richard Pryor.

Sports fans will enjoy art from Packers Gilbert Brown, Craig Newsome, Ross Verba and Darren Sharper plus a Paul Harvey-autographed 'For What It's Worth' item, Weidner Center tickets and two nights lodging at Appleton's Paper Valley Hotel.

The evening opens at 6 pm with cocktails and the silent auction. Community service awards will be presented to one organization; the Boys & Girls Club Fox Cities, and to six individuals; Dr. Ray Bachhuber, Channel 5's Tim Blotz, Mark Mariucci of Quest magazine, Michael Van Asten of Liberty Hall and Packers' Tyronne and Shantel Williams.

Teri Barr of WLUK Fox 11 and Erin Davisson of WFRV CBS 5 will fill the mistress of ceremonies roles; Dan McDonough, member of the United Nations Global AIDS Task Force and Have A Heart co-chair, will be the keynote. Entertainers Against AIDS will present a musical performance to conclude the evening.

UW-Madison hosts 7th Annual Midwest Les-Bi-Gay-Trans College Conference

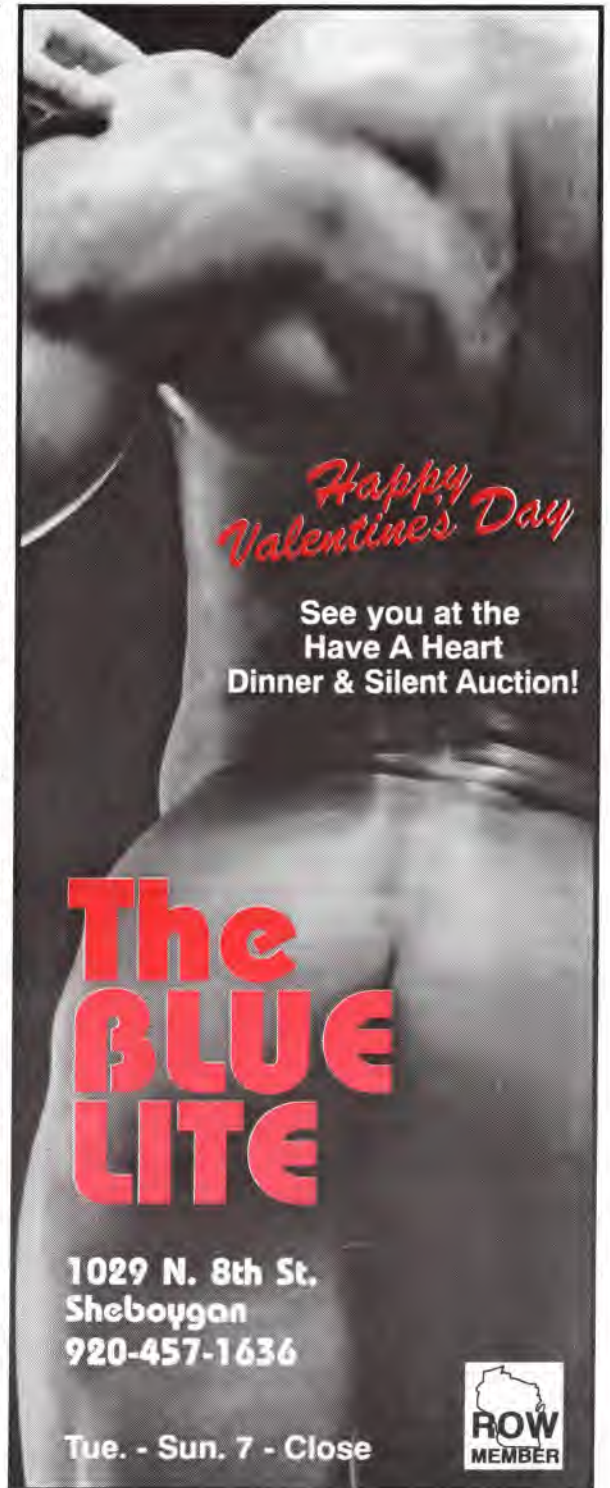

University of Wisconsin - Madison hosts 7th Annual Midwest Bisexual Lesbian Gay Transgender College Conference at Monona Terrace in Madison from February 19-21 conference organizers announced today.

Headliners include Virginia Apuzzo, Rebecca Walker, Larry Kramer, Alexis Sainz, Riki Anne Wilchins, Candace Gingrich, Nancy Buermyer, and Kevin Jennings. The conference also features over 65 breakout sessions on a diverse array of topics, from hate crimes to HIV, from identity politics to sex.

The weekend will also feature numerous other items of interest, including a historical poster display from the Center for Political Graphics, a display of Quilt panels from the Names Project, a welcome from Congresswoman Tammy Baldwin, book signings by Larry Kramer, Riki Anne Wilchins, and Rebecca Walker, a film festival, and an exhibit and vendor area.

Of special interest is Friday night's extra special Ten Percent Society dance, open to the public and featuring a live drag king performance by the Men of Club Casanova from New York City.

Over 800 people have already registered and it's filling up fast. The Large capacity of Monona Terrace allows the organizers to open this event to the community at large; however, space is limited. Psychic Thoughts

BUILDING INTIMACY

Many calls which I receive are involving wishes that my clients would like to see become reality. The most sought after wish is a wish to be loved—to be able to reveal themselves entirely to another person and be embraced, caressed, by that acceptance. People who have successfully built an intimate relationship know its power and comfort. But they also know that taking the emotional risks that allow intimacy to happen isn't all that easy. Preconditioned on the sharing of feelings, intimacy requires consummate trust. Most often people are finding that today trust is in short supply.

Although trust in a partner means different things to different people, dependability, loyalty, honesty, fidelity—its essence is emotional safety. Trust enables you to put your deepest feelings and fears in the palm of your partner's hand, knowing they will be handled with care. While feelings of love or sexual excitement may wax and wane over time, ideally, trust is a constant. When you have it, you have it all. The challenge for most of us is not to let the specter of deception in love interfere with finding the intimate connection we want and need in our lives.

When the world—or your own past—plants seeds of doubt, how is it possible to overlook them? Clearly, people's capacity for trust in intimate relationships varies widely, depending many factors—early upbringing, the quality of their parent's relationship, their own experiences with love. Because none emerges unscathed from that early infantile period when basic trust, the sense that the world is fundamentally a kindly place is formed, none of us is one hundred percent trusting or trustworthy.

Yet the more trusting we are, the more likely we are to be trusted by others. This theory of reciprocity can be used to help build trust. Take the risk of trusting, and you may be trusted in return. Initially, this requires the sophisticated skill of sensing just how far to risk your trust. True trust is felt, not willed. It must be developed over time, by sharing your innermost thoughts and feelings gradually, and seeing how they are received.

In order to have a long and lasting relationship with a partner, it is important to realize that there are these risks to contend with. The biggest risk is the risk of failure. Past failures in our lives create a wall around us. This wall is rigid and doesn't allow others to approach us in a productive manner. Until this wall comes crumbling down, we are not willing to risk anything because the fear is overpowering our hopes, dreams, desires and life. Be willing to run the risk of failure. Take the lessons learned from the past and cast aside the negative. Rebuild the trust within yourself so you are able to trust those around you.

To be able to be oneself and not have to disown ones values to please another is what intimate love is all about.

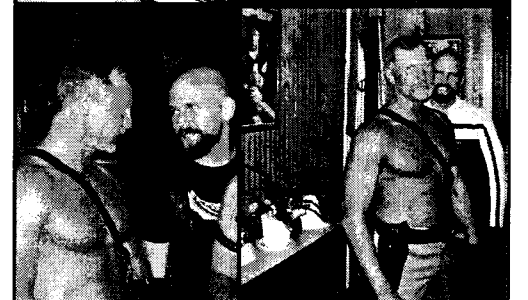

MAY YOU ALL HAVE A HAPPY VALENTINE'S DAY!
