TOP EVANGELICAL STEPS DOWN AMID GAY SEX, DRUG USE CLAIMS

Colorado Springs - In a year already filled with gay sex scandals among Republicans and right-wing religious, the election eve revelations by a Denver male prostitute about Rev. Ted Haggard, President of the National Association of Evangelicals, lead pastor at the 14,000-member New Life Church here and one of the most visible supporters of the proposed Colorado gay marriage ban measure may be the most damning example of the hypocrisy of the so-called Religious Right.

As of Quest's deadline, Haggard has admitted to church elders that some of 49-year old in/out call masseur Mike Jones' accusations made public November 1 were indeed true, adding public lying to the reports that he paid for gay sexual favors for three years and occasionally used crystal meth during those trysts. Haggard stepped down as head of the national evangelical group and as the mega-church's pastor November 2, pending an investigation by a church panel. A day earlier Haggard, a married father of five, had told a Denver TV station that he "never had a gay relationship with anybody" and was faithful to his wife.

Haggard's accuser said he decided to go public because Colorado is considering an amendment to ban gay marriage. Jones said he was upset to discover that Haggard and the New Life Church oppose same-sex marriage.

Haggard has been well-known for meeting regularly with President George W. Bush to push his evangelical agenda and was also featured in the recently released film Jesus Camp. In the film, he said that when evangelicals vote, they determine an election. After the comments gained notoriety after the film's release, Haggard disavowed the comments.

Despite right-wing claims that Haggard's disgrace was "political" and timed "right before the elections," Jones denied he was not affiliated with any political group, but admitted the pending Colorado ballot measure to ban gay marriage in Colorado was his reason for coming forward. Haggard has been one of the most outspoken opponents of gay marriage in the political fight over the amendment.

Jones told the Associated Press that Haggard paid him to have sex nearly every month over three years. The 49-year-old Jones said he had advertised himself as an escort and masseur on an AOL-hosted web page under the screen name Feelssogood. Jones said a man who called himself "Art" contacted him. Jones said he later saw the man on television identified as Haggard. Jones said he has voice mails and other evidence to back his allegations.

Church members also may have had previous hints of Haggard's improprieties. After defending his pastor to the Associated Press and calling the gay sex claims "ridiculous," church member E.J. Cox also noted, "People are always saying stuff about Pastor Ted."

In a follow-up interview November 3 with Denver TV station KUSA, Haggard admitted to purchasing but not using the crystal meth, getting massages from Jones but not having sex and seeking out LGBT publications for "delivery services." Jones also played taped voice mails from Haggard on a Denver talk radio station and took an on-air polygraph test, which he failed.

LAST MINUTE VOTE "YES"
AD CAMPAIGN APPEARS
LOBBYING GROUP DUMP HALF MILLION TO SUPPORT BAN

Madison - Just days following the deadline for reporting contributions to be announced before the November 7 vote, a massive radio, telephone message and TV campaign supporting the proposed constitutional amendment banning civil unions and gay marriage has begun.

A group headed by the former chairman of the state Republican Party has given $385,000 to the campaign for a ban on gay marriage and civil unions, records show. The money from Middleton-based Coalition for America's Families is helping fund television advertisements meant to bolster conservative turnout. A large Republican turnout also could effect the campaigns for governor and a key congressional seat in northeastern Wisconsin.

Coalition for America's Families has been running ads attacking Democratic Governor Jim Doyle for more than one year. It made the donation to Vote Yes for Marriage on Oct. 26, according to records filed the next day with the state Elections Board.

Vote Yes for Marriage in turn has booked at least $266,000 in television advertisements in the Milwaukee and Green Bay markets to try to sway voters in favor of a proposed constitutional amendment that would ban gay marriage.

Vote Yes For Marriage political action group helmed by Julaine Appling. Appling is also the Executive Director of the Family Research Institute of Wisconsin, FRI-WI's lobbying arm Wisconsin Family Action and also helms the Coalition To Protect Traditional Marriage.

The group released its first ad October 30. The 30-second commercial features professional, primary grade-aged child actors on a dark soundstage mouthing comments that would appear to be far more mature than their tender years. One claims a teacher told him "Grandma, it's okay. If grandpa was a girl, you could still be married," and another quips "God made Adam and Eve? That's so old-fashioned."

The spots also attempt to re-define the issue away from the second sentence, a strategy that has been employed since mid-summer by ban opponents. "Marriage means a man and a woman," a narrator says. "Vote yes to keep it that way."

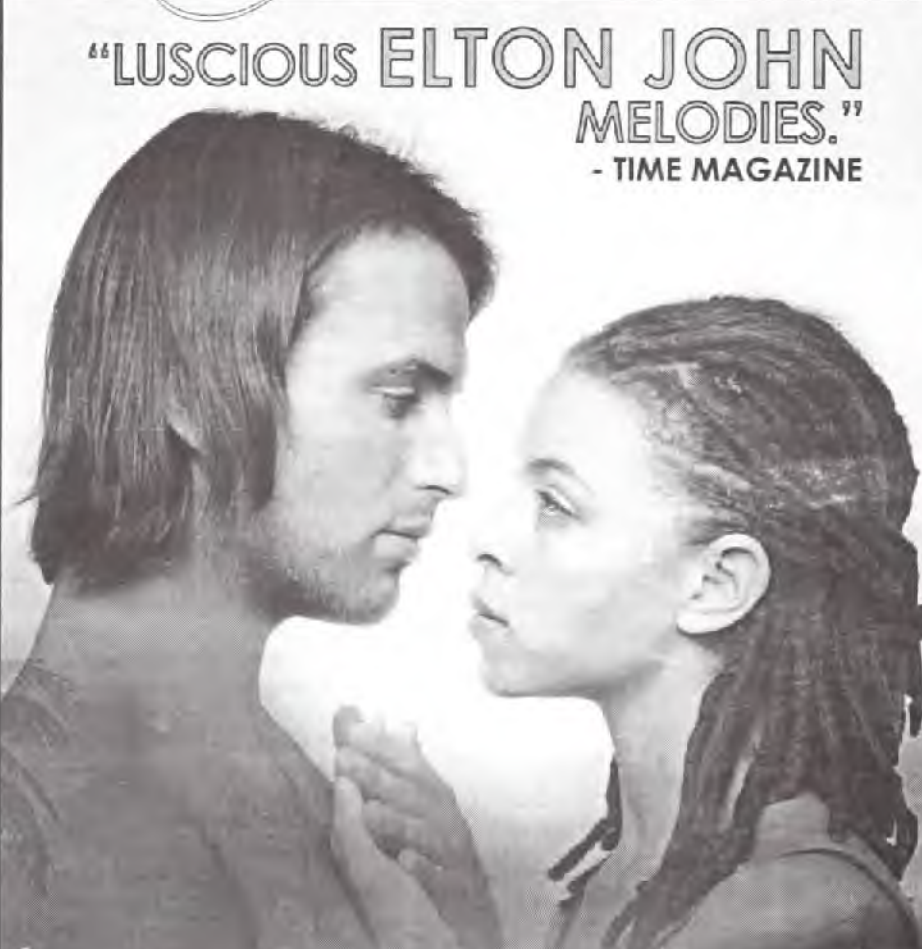

The commercial ignores the fact that the amendment would add two sentences to the Wisconsin Constitution, the first declaring that marriage is between one man and one woman and the the second requiring the state not to recognize similar relationships among unmarried individuals, such as civil unions.

Coalition for America's Families, headed by former GOP chairman Steve King, does not have to disclose its donors and can accept unlimited contributions. It attacked Doyle in a television ad last year for supporting domestic partner benefits for gay and lesbian state employees.

Additionally Vote Yes is running a series of radio ads on Christian and talk radio stations statewide claiming that failure to pass the amendment would result in "activist judges" on the state's Supreme Court making Wisconsin like "Massachusetts and now New Jersey."

Wisconsin Marriage Action is sponsoring recorded phone messages by Rep. Mark Gundrum identifying himself as the "sponsor of the one man, one woman marriage amendment." The phone messages claim the pending ACLU lawsuit by lesbian state employees in long-term, committed relationships will lead to the state's Supreme Court legalizing gay marriage. Gundrum's "robo-calls" came just a week after he appeared on Milwaukee talk show host Charlie Sykes program complaining that the "yes" side had no funds to run any type of commercials.

Despite the nearly half million dollars poured into the "yes" side, ban opponents have raised significantly more. Fair Wisconsin had raised $3.8 million this year, according to a report released October 30. Though most of the donations came from Wisconsin residents, other money included $300,000 from Michigan businessman Jon Stryker and $25,000 in-kind donation from pop icon Elton John. The Democratic National Party also gave $10,000. One of the largest donations of any sort was $250,000 from Milwaukee philanthropist Lynde Uihlein.

Appling claimed the donation from Coalition for America's Families was unexpected but "a sign that people are actually energized."

Using a phrase coded to perk the ears of gospel-savvy evangelical voters, Appling also told the Associated Press: "They want to make sure everybody hears the good news about what a yes vote is and what a no vote is. They want people to understand that votes are important."

Ads will run disproportionately in northeast Wisconsin, a Quest review of campaign buys suggests. Republican congressional candidate John Gard is in a tight race to represent the Green Bay area against Democrat Steve Kagen. Gard not only supported the amendment but played a key role in putting the measure on the ballot as Assembly speaker.

NEW JERSEY LAWMAKERS: "GAY MARRIAGE WILL TAKE TIME"

Trenton - Gay marriage could be a reality in New Jersey years in the future, the state's two top lawmakers said October 31, a week following the state's high court ruling mandating the legislature provide legal recognition same-sex couples.

In the immediate future the Legislature will likely approve civil unions that grant committed same-sex couples the same rights as married couples, Senate President Richard Codey and Assembly Speaker Joseph Roberts Jr., said in separate interviews to metro media.

"I think the public will be all right with civil unions and I think down the road ... in another six, seven years, we may very well see gay marriage enacted in the state of New Jersey," Codey said in an interview on WCBS radio. Codey predicted that legislation to allow civil unions would likely move by January 1.

Roberts favors allowing gay marriage, but expects the Legislature to approve civil unions, saying that route reflects prevailing opinions among lawmakers and the public. But he said public attitudes on the subject are still evolving. "At some point down the line there will be broader support for same-sex marriage, but I don't believe we are there yet," Roberts said in a telephone interview with Gannett Newspapers.

Codey, who has said he prefers civil unions to gay marriage, said the public is not ready to approve same-sex marriage. He noted that it has been less than three years since lawmakers narrowly approved a domestic partnership law that gave gay couples some, but not all, of the rights of marriage.

"Unfortunately, full civil rights doesn't always come at the same time and there's hurdles," Codey said. "But we have made significant progress, and I would just have them look forward to gay marriage sometime in the future when public opinion clearly changes."

Though they have little support in the state, New Jersey's right wing was quick to respond to the ruling. Len Deo, president of the New Jersey Family Policy Council, held a press conference in which he claimed public sentiment was going against the court's opinion, with more Americans supporting constitutional amendments barring gay marriage. "New Jerseyans support some type of benefits (for gay couples), but they don't support renaming or redefining marriage," Deo said. "I don't think that that's going to change over time."

Deo believes the state should expand its existing domestic partnership law, rather than draw up rules for civil unions.

David Buckel, the attorney for seven New Jersey couples who sued the state for the right to marry, said a civil unions bill "would create one of the largest forms of statutory discrimination ever created in the state."

Connecticut and Vermont allow civil unions, but Buckel said some families there feel that those arrangements carry a "label of inferiority put on them by the government." In Massachusetts, the only state where gay marriage is allowed, "the sky didn't fall," Buckel said.

The state Supreme Court ruled October 25 that committed gay couples must be granted the same rights as married heterosexuals, but the court left the Legislature to decide how to provide those rights.

NEW STUDY SHOWS INCREASE IN U.S. GAY POPULATION

Los Angeles - The news that same-sex couples lived in nearly every county of the United States marked one of most reported on statistics from the release of Census 2000 data. Since then, policy debates focusing on marriage and partnership rights for same-sex couples have led academics and policy-makers alike to use these data in hopes of gaining a more complete and accurate understanding of this population.

According to a new UCLA Williams Institute on Sexual Orientation study, "the release of new data from the American Community Survey (ACS) in October 2006 offers the first opportunity to update what we have learned and to assess possible changes in the geographic and demographic characteristics of same-sex couples."

According to the UCLA report, analyses of the ACS 2005 data reveal the number of same-sex couples in the U.S. grew by more than 30% from 2000 to 2005. The actual numbers counted the increase from nearly 600,000 couples in 2000 to almost 777,000 in 2005. Such an increase is five times the 6% rate of growth in the U.S. population.

Researchers speculated that "most likely as stigma associated with same-sex partnering and homosexuality in general decreases, more same-sex couples are willing to identify themselves as such on government surveys like the ACS."

At the state level, the largest percentage increase in the number of same-sex couples occurred throughout the Midwest, an area that had relatively low rates of these couples in Census 2000. The ten states with the largest percentage increase included Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, and Ohio. In addition, Colorado and New Hampshire also ranked in the top ten in terms of percentage growth.

The study also noted that six of the eight states with a 2006 ballot initiative that would ban same-sex marriage - Arizona, Colorado, South Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, and Wisconsin - experienced increases in the number of same-sex couples in excess of the national rate of 30%. Wisconsin's rate of growth was 81%, according to researchers.

The study reported that there are an estimated 8.8 million gay, lesbian, and bisexual (GLB) persons in the U.S. as of the end of 2005, just ten months prior to the historic addition of the 300 millionth person to the nation's population. Among the states, California, Florida, New York, Texas, and Illinois have the largest gay populations along with the District of Columbia. New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, San Francisco, and Boston have the largest GLB populations among metropolitan areas. Ranking states by the percentage of the adult population who are GLB, the District of Columbia, New Hampshire, Washington, Massachusetts and Maine come out on top. Among large metropolitan areas, San Francisco, Seattle, Boston, Portland, and Tampa rank in the top five in this statistic.

The study also noted that same-sex couples are found in all Congressional districts in the U.S. The release of the 2005 ACS marks the first time that data regarding same-sex couples are available for current Congressional districts. Congressional districts with the highest number and percentage of GLB individuals in the population tend to be more urban with California's 8th district (San Francisco) ranking first in both categories.

Though increases and decreases in population are often understood as indicators of mobility patterns in the population, this is likely not the case for same-sex couples as the changes observed differ from broader mobility patterns in the United States, namely population movements to the South and West, researchers reported.

The study offered reasons for the larger than expected surge in same-sex couples. "Increases in the number of same-sex couples are more likely a result of at least two important factors," researchers wrote, "both related to increasing acceptance of same-sex relationships within the U.S. population."

Researchers determined that larger portions of lesbians, gay men, and bisexuals may be choosing to couple with partners of the same sex. Also, larger numbers of same-sex couples may be willing to report the nature of their relationship to the Census Bureau.

"While both of these trends might be occurring, it seems likely that coupling rates of GLB individuals would not change on the order of the magnitude observed in these data over such a short period of time. Increased visibility represents the most likely scenario to explain such a rapid increase," the study concluded.

MISSOURI BAPTISTS CONSIDER BOYCOTT OF "GAY FRIENDLY" WAL-MART

Cape Girardeau - Delegates at the annual meeting of the Missouri Baptist Convention voted November 1 to warn Wal-Mart Stores Inc. that it was considering a boycott of the company because of its "pro-homosexual support." The 1,200 delegates, or "messengers" who represent the state's 600,000 Southern Baptists, passed a resolution to "inform Wal-Mart of our biblical beliefs on marriage . . . and our encouragement that Wal-Mart reconsider their policy which offends so many customers."

In August Wal-Mart announced a partnership, including financial support, with the National Gay and Lesbian Chamber of Commerce, joining other companies like IBM, American Airlines, Intel Corp. and American Express.

"As a company, we are reaching out to the LGBT community as part of our ongoing commitment to nondiscrimination and diversity, just as we are reaching out to multiple other groups," said David Tovar, director of media relations for Wal-Mart Stores. "The important point is to recognize and respect all of our associates and customers and the values they hold, both our current base and groups that we have begun working with more recently."

A spokesman for the Southern Baptist convention said that of the eleven state conventions that have held annual meetings so far, Missouri's was the first he was aware of that had passed such a resolution. The 29 remaining state conventions will hold annual meetings in the next two weeks.

The November 1 session, at Southeast Missouri State's Show Me Center, grew heated at times when representatives from the floor of the meeting demanded that stronger language pledging a total boycott of Wal-Mart stores be inserted into the resolution.

Convention leaders explained that the wording of the resolution was "designed from Disney language" and written in "a moral code" that Wal-Mart lawyers would understand as a warning. The "moral code" warning reads: "We encourage the 2,100 Missouri Baptist churches and their members to exercise moral stewardship regarding the businesses they patronize."

In 1997, the Southern Baptist Convention called for a boycott of the Walt Disney Co. for offering benefits to partners of gay employees. Disney never changed its policy, and the convention ended the boycott eight years later.

The Rev. Rodney Albert, a member of the convention's Resolution Committee, told the delegates that an "economic boycott was premature" and the body eventually adopted the less drastic resolution.

The Missouri Baptist Convention is a fellowship of 2,000 congregations who cooperate with the 16-million-member Southern Baptist Convention, the largest Protestant denomination in the United States.

THROAT MOST COMMON SITE FOR GAY MALE GONORRHEA

San Francisco - Gay men should have regular throat swabs to check for infection with gonorrhea, researchers recommend following a study conducted here found that 6% of gay men had the sexually transmitted infection in their throat, usually without any symptoms. The study, which is published in the November edition of Clinical Infectious Diseases also found that the throat was the most common site for gonorrhea infection in gay men and that younger age and a greater number of oral sex partners were significantly associated with gonorrhea of the throat.

The US Centers for Disease Control reported that in 2003 the prevalence of gonorrhea among gay men was 15%. Earlier studies looking at the prevalence of pharyngeal gonorrhea - gonorrhea of the throat - among gay men have found a prevalence of between 3% and 15%. However, there are a lack of longitudinal data from an on-going cohort of gay men looking at the prevalence, incidence and risk factors for gonorrhea infection in the throat.

Investigators from the Explore study in San Francisco performed gonorrhea tests on 603 gay men at baseline and then at six-monthly intervals. Swabs were taken from the throat, penis and rectum. The men were also asked to provide demographic information and details of their recent sexual risk behavior.

To be included in the study, the men had to be HIV- at baseline. The mean age was 36 years, 71% were white, 72% had completed secondary education or higher, and over two-thirds had an annual income of $30,000 or more.

At baseline, 5% had gonorrhea in the throat, and 18% of individuals had at least one episode of gonorrhea of the throat during the course of the study. Of the individuals who became HIV-positive during follow-up, 21% had at least one episode of gonorrhea of the throat.

Overall prevalence of pharyngeal gonorrhea was 6%, compared to 2% for rectal gonorrhea and 1% for urethral gonorrhea.

In their initial analysis, the investigators found that performing sex on a man known to be HIV+, a greater number of oral sex partners and younger age were all significantly associated with gonorrhea of the throat. A sore throat was not predictive of pharyngeal gonorrhea meaning that in most cases gonorrhea infection in the throat was asymptomatic.

Although gonorrhea in the throat clears without treatment in 50% of cases within one week and in all cases within three months, the investigators emphasize that the high prevalence of the infection found in their study demonstrates that the throat acts as a "reservoir" for gonorrhea transmission amongst gay men. They therefore recommend that all sexually active gay men should have a throat swab to check for gonorrhea in the throat annually, and that gay men who have multiple or anonymous partners should have such swabs every three to six months.

TENNIS GREAT NAVRATILOVA, PETA OUTRAGED OVER "EX-GAY SHEEP" EXPERIMENTS

Los Angeles - Lesbian tennis star Martina Navratilova and the animal rights group People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals are condemning hormone-altering experiments on "gay sheep" at Oregon State University and Oregon Health and Science University. The taxpayer funded experiment will attempt to manipulate sheep's sexual orientation and make them heterosexual.

In letters sent to the presidents of both universities, Navratilova called the project "homophobic and cruel." She asked both presidents to end the research and redirect tax dollars to fund "a gay and lesbian community center to foster dialogue and acceptance for people of all sexual preferences."

The experiment, headed by OHSU's Charles Rosselli and OSU's Frederick Stormshak, involves drugging pregnant sheep to prevent the actions of hormones in their fetuses' brains and cutting open the brains of rams they call "male-oriented." This is to find the hormonal mechanisms behind homosexual tendencies so that they can be changed by an estrogen device. According to the project's grant applications, the experimenters plan to extrapolate the test results to humans.

STUDY: HIV+ ON MEDICATIONS CAN LIVE 24 YEARS

Boston - People with HIV can get 24 extra years of life from modern treatments, but at a total cost of about $618,900. That finding comes from a joint research team of researchers from Cornell, Johns Hopkins, Harvard and Boston University that analyzed the costs and benefits of modern HIV treatment. The team report appears in the November issue of journal Medical Care.

According to the team, when first introduced in 1996, a combination of then-new HIV drugs increased life expectancy by four years. Now there are 24 HIV drugs on the market. The benefits are huge, but so are the costs.

"We have been very successful in HIV treatment, extending lives by at least 24 years," Cornell researcher Bruce R. Schackman, Ph.D. said. "As with many health care innovations, success is expensive. We have to make sure we have enough funds available so that everyone can get that life extension with the best care available."

Doctors don't usually start HIV treatment right away. That's because it takes time for the AIDS virus to wear down the immune system. Treatment usually starts when immune cells called CD4 T cells decline to a certain level - typically 350 cells per microliter of blood.

When treatment does begin, the average monthly cost is about $2,100. The drug bills are nearly 75% of the lifetime medical expenses. Routine health monitoring and the associated blood tests also make up a significant portion of the remaining total for those who are compliant in the taking of their medications.

Unfortunately, one in four people with HIV don't know they're infected. They find out only when their immune system collapses. The cost of treatment started at this late stage averages $4,700 per month. That's because hospital costs rise to almost half the lifetime expense.

In the last 10 years, the U.S. has tripled its spending on HIV-related medical care. Yet it's falling behind. Future costs, Schackman and colleagues estimate, will be $12.1 billion per year. Drugs will make up 70% of the cost. "Access to HIV care may become increasingly difficult unless more government funds become available or the cost of HIV care is reduced," Johns Hopkins researcher Richard D. Moore said in the news release announcing the study.

Of course, the least expensive option would be to prevent the estimated 40,000 new HIV infections that occur each year in the U.S. "Successful prevention of HIV can prevent a lot of cost," Schackman said. "There is a lot of value to programs that prevent HIV."

NEW YORK POST CARTOON RILES GAY ACTIVISTS

New York - Gay activists are up in arms with the Rupert Murdoch-owned tabloid New York Post for publishing an anti-gay cartoon in reaction to the recent New Jersey ruling on same sex unions. New Jersey's Supreme Court ruled that gay couples should be equal before the law October 25, prompting the Post's cartoonist to draw a man carrying a sheep wearing a bridal veil to get married in the state.

The Gay and Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation (GLAAD) called the publication "repugnant" and has asked supporters to complain to the newspaper's managing editor.

It is the second time the Post has printed a cartoon satirizing the gay community after earlier this month printing a cartoon showing a caricature of Former New Jersey Governor James McGreevey "comforting" ousted Congressman Mark Foley with the caption, "Look on the bright side Foley, you'll have a best selling book," alluding to his own autobiography about coming out.

Sean Lund, GLAAD's director of messaging and communications strategy, said: "Twice in one month the New York Post has seen fit to publish a repugnant anti-gay cartoon. It's unacceptable for any publication to platform this type of bigotry."

NEIL PATRICK HARRIS: "I'M GAY"

Los Angeles - "I am quite proud to say that I am a very content gay man living my life to the fullest," TV sitcom star Neil Patrick Harris has told People magazine. The 33-year-old actor said he decided to reveal his sexuality to end "speculation and interest in my private life and relationships."

Harris may be referring to an October 23 item on the Canada.com website that claimed he had helped his "longtime sweetheart," actor David Burtka, land a part on his hit CBS sitcom "How I Met Your Mother."

That was followed by an unconfirmed report November 1 that a publicist for Harris said the actor is "not of that persuasion." Perez Hilton, Defamer.com and other gossip blogs jumped on the topic, eager to "out" the actor.

Hilton, who is openly gay, counts Harris' coming out as a victory. "We are so proud (despite the naysayers) in having a hand in bringing about change," writes the self-defined "Queen Of All Media," using the royal "we."

Harris rose to fame on TV as a teen, playing the namesake doctor on the series "Doogie Howser, M.D." He plays the womanizing Barney Stinson on the CBS show "How I Met Your Mother."

CATHOLICS BUCK BISHOP ON AMENDMENT STANCE

Madison - Roman Catholics in the Madison Diocese opposing the proposed civil union and gay marriage amendment to the Wisconsin Constitution have fired back to recent statements by Bishop Robert Morlino supporting the ballot measure. A letter entitled an "Open Letter To Bishop Morlino From Catholic Families Who Support Basic Rights For Civil Unions" has been distributed by email to other Catholics and a half-page ad is running in the November 2 edition of the Wisconsin State Journal. Opponents chastise the bishop for mixing politics and religion, recalling historic church purges.

"We Catholic families of the Madison Diocese want to publicly express our disagreement with your position statement published in the Catholic Herald, in which you equated the right of a loving gay couple to enjoy the legal benefits of a civil union similar to marriage with a 'satanic plan to destroy family life... and our country from within,'" the letter stated. "To be blunt, we believe your position is dangerous and wrong. Wrong on proper Christian teaching and wrong on a logic that states 'purifying the culture in the United States' requires denying basic civil rights to those who honor Christ's teaching to create love, stability and peace in our communities. We believe your pronouncements have lent assistance to regressive politicians whose political agenda includes gay-bashing and the politics of hate and division. For that reason, we needed to speak out."

Opponents believe the bishop's position hurts the church. "We believe you have done a great disservice to the Church and the mission of Christ by issuing such an incendiary call to arms," the letter continued. "Equating a vote to pass a constitutional amendment, which for the first time in history would deny rights to minorities in our constitution, rather than protect them, with a 'holy battle' is reminiscent of the crusader mentality that brought shame to our Church so long ago. There is no scriptural or logical basis for asserting that granting loving gay couples the basic civil protections and legal benefits of a committed union will result in any straight couple's marriage, or the broader institution of marriage to 'go down the tubes.' Think about it-- if two loving, committed gay people form a long-lasting union and we in our democracy extend commensurate civil rights-- how are our heterosexual marriages, much less the entire institution of marriage, threatened? We believe the single most destructive force in family life is the breakup of marriage, which leaves kids fatherless and single mothers struggling."

Opponents accused the bishop of not seeing the humanity of gay and lesbian couples. "Because you and others are not looking at our gay brothers and sisters as fellow creations of God, who have all the same dreams and needs of the rest of us, it remains easier to talk about them in generalities, reflexive prejudices and out-of-context Biblical citations."

Opponents also characterized the Bishop's comments as being un-Christian like. "Jesus told us the most important of his teachings was to 'love one another' with tolerance and understanding being fundamental to the Christian way of life," the letter continued. "Therefore, we believe our Christian faith requires us to stand up for the rights of those who choose commitment over convenience, love over prejudice, and family stability over selfishness. While the Church may nonetheless see fit to resist the idea of 'gay marriage,' it cannot justify supporting that part of the proposed constitutional amendment that also imposes a restrictive and punitive ban that forever precludes extending basic civil rights to the committed union of both straight and gay couples."

The letter concluded by claiming amendment supporters were un-Christian. "Such a ban runs contrary to Church teaching that requires us as Christians to engage in a constant process of discernment and understanding of the problems and needs of our fellow citizens. A ban closes the door forever and in our judgment removes from future generations, that hopefully are smarter and more compassionate than us, the opportunity to evolve on this issue," the letter said.

Press calls to the Morlino's office requesting comment on the open letter and advertisement were not returned.

DOBSON'S SPONGEBOB LEGAL TEAM WANTS IN ON SUPREME COURT DP LAWSUIT HEARING

Madison - The Arizona-based, James Dobson-founded Christian legal team that took on SpongeBob SquarePants for alleged hidden gay messages wants the state Supreme Court to allow it to represent the Wisconsin Legislature in fighting a lawsuit in which gay and lesbian state employees are seeking health benefits for domestic partners.

The Alliance Defense Fund, appealing lower court rulings that lawmakers can't intervene in the case, says the lawsuit could lay the groundwork for overturning the state's marriage laws. The gay state employees are not asking for marriage rights, but they argue a ban on domestic partner benefits violates the equal protection clause of the constitution.

However, ADF lawyer Glen Lavy claims the case illustrates the need for the November 7 amendment to Wisconsin's constitution to protect marriage as a union between one man and one woman. The proposed amendment would also ban any type of civil unions that could be equated to marriage.

All court rulings to date have said the state Department of Justice already represents the state in the case.

Thank You SIR: by Jeff Hicks

How do you/we define a "Scene" and what is private vs. public?

First of all a Scene is usually understood to be an event or occurrence where 2 or more persons gather to engage in mutual dominant / submissive behavior and actions. Most often these occurrences take place in VERY private locations. That is where they can go to their most extreme! For many people "Going to the Extreme" or "Edge-Play", is the principle reason to engage in such activities. When in a private location all of the participants self define their roles within that activity. This can range from who takes a dominant/passive sexual role, to who is the Sadist/masochist! All variations in between are often engaged in.

But then a scene can happen in a public setting. When that is the case the possibility of "full sexual contact" being involved is rather unlikely.

There are two types of Public Play. First there is the play amongst a crowd of Like minded (Dom/sub-straight or gay) people. This can be at a Leather gathering, Run, or similar event. Such events will often include a "play Space / Dungeon". If your Play is going to be extensively sexual, or INTENSELY physical, that is the place to try it. Overt ual actions in the host hotel lobby or Dining room are not considered appropriate. Outside of the Dungeon, Discipline and or obedience training/activities can and often do take place in the 'public spaces' of the event locale. These are frequently limited to verbal and gestural corrections. They may include appearing with sub in collar and leash, or similarly 'restraining' devices. Corporal punishment actions can sometimes take place at the Host Hotel as well as other venues attached to the event. These will be limited to actions not of a shocking nature to the general populace in attendance.

The second type of public play can be practiced at any time. Subtle actions between a Dom and sub can and very often do take place. These can be as simple as seeing to it that upon arrival at a restaurant that the sub informs the host of the seating arrangements needed. The sub should follow the host and Dom to the table. At the table the Dom expects to be seated first while the sub checks the completeness of the table settings to the satisfaction and needs of the Dom. This may mean an ashtray, if appropriate, and/or other sex- appointments. Very often two or more Leather men of knowledge can and will engage in full Scene protocol and full roleplaying in public locations in front of a very unknowing public without their ever even guessing what is happening. This is done quite often, much to the delight of the practitioners.

So you can define a scene any way you wish. We all in contemporary society tend to 'label', 'define', 'explain' ourselves and/or each other with titles. Most of us in the Leather/Levi Scene define ourselves with the L/L position (Dom/sub), title. Other definitions may apply or be used by many. A frequent one is 'people who "play" in the Scene'. Some are far less complimentary. As two people get together, define your Scene and/or yourselves as meets your desires. It is you who counts in private. If you play in public, expect closely guarded protocols to be exhibited and EXPECTED of you, & all around you.

NEW ON DVD by Glenn Bishop Sideline Secrets

With so many terrific new DVD releases like "Adam & Steve," "Hell Bent" and "The Mostly Unfabulous Social Life of Ethan Green," it is perhaps not surprising that Glenn initially missed the micro-budget independent "Sideline Secrets."

James Townsend, who also penned the film's screenplay, plays a cute high school senior, Devon. On the surface Devon appears to be a pretty normal teenager. The proverbial "best little boy in the world," Devon not only has the requisite girlfriend but is also at the top of his graduating class. An enviable teen, thinks Glenn. Yet simmering just beneath the surface of this suburban domesticity is a seriously dysfunctional family situation.

Poor Devon. Not only does Devon's zoned out mother (Sonja Fisher) need her medication tweaked but his evil step-father (Dan Swett) is a psychotic homophobe. While seeking refuge at his favorite coffee hangout, Devon is given a promo card for a new gay club. Initially Devon pretends to be outraged for being taken as gay. Not that Devon immediately throws away the offending card. Oh-no. In fact, later that night Devon is spied masturbating to the hot, naked guy on the advertisement.

The next day finds Devon having a heart-to-heart with his girlfriend Jenna (Sara Kelly). Unlike her boyfriend, Jenna is evidently ready to be ravished — right there in the park, if needs be. Yet, as Devon is kissing Jenna, he is actually fantasizing having sex with the two cute twinks playing Frisbee nearby. Curiously, in these fantasies, Devon is seen sans his dreadful shaggy bleach-blond hair.

Eventually, Devon realizes that he can no longer run and hide from his homosexual urges, mustering up enough courage to take those difficult first steps by going to the advertised gay club. Once there, Devon appears less than captivated by the strange and mysterious gay club. Think, "deer caught in the headlights." Glenn did.

Rightly fleeing for his life, Devon is approached by a cute young gay guy in the parking lot. Meet Brian (Alex Wilson). They chatty, ever-so briefly and, as is so often the case in films such as this, the two manage to fall truly, madly, deeply in love. Instantly. No, really.

Up until this is the point "Sideline Secrets" has been a pleasant if predictable, coming-of-age flick albeit one filled plenty of hot nude boys. Now Townsend's screenplay bizarrely morphs into an overheated melodrama involving the disappearance of several gay teens. As luck would have it, Devon soon manages to stumble upon some evidence that implicates his evil (not to mention dreadfully acted) step-father, Dr. Kyle Tyler (Dan Swett).

Can Devon, Brian and the loyal gal pal, Jenna thwart Dr. Kyle Tyler's evil plot? Can Devon's mother skip the medication long enough to realize what a loser her husband is? Is there a happily-ever-after ending even possible for Devon and Brian? Or will the two lads end up merely faces on a milk carton?

Buy It, Rent It or Forget It

Thanks to the two cute boys that grace the DVD box cover, Glenn imagines that many loyal Quest readers will be likewise intrigued by "Sideline Secrets." What they'll find once the DVD is popped into the player is a surprisingly entertaining coming-of-age film boasting some atrocious acting, bizarre plot twists but happily enough male nudity to please even the most demanding viewer.

Just the facts...

"Sideline Secrets" runs approx. 96 minutes and is in English. All about "Sideline Secrets" including a photo gallery, at www.inthepinkprods.com "Sideline Secrets" is available now and has a SRP of $19.95

Michael Haboush seen fleetingly as "Drah'ma Bartender" can also be found in many low-budget gay flicks including "Issues 101," "Ben and Arthur" and the supremely dreadful, "K-Hole." Fans of "Dante's Cove" may recognize Earl McDougle's well-endowed Detective Cunningham as the equally well-endowed valet Tracy Scoggins fries in the opening moments of the series' first episode. DVD offers no extras.

Ask the Irreverent, Uncle Barbie

Disclaimer: Although the author of this syndicated column holds a doctorate in clinical psychology, the tongue-in-cheek advice given is for entertainment only and is not a substitute for

Dear Barbie,

I'm new to the coming out scene and rather confused. If gay men say they don't carry roles, then why do they all walk around acting like women? Signed, Coming out confused

Hello COC,

Your confusion may be stemming from your need to place people into sex roles. Let's look at this issue logically. Do you truly believe that all men who are gay walk around acting like women? It sounds to me like you are making a generalization (about both male and female sex roles). How are men supposed to act? How are women supposed to act? Since you are new to the coming out scene, you may not know this, but most people want to be viewed as individuals and not as a stereotype. People have the right to be themselves (as long as they do not harm anyone). My advice is that you just be who you are naturally, and stop trying to categorize the other gay men. Celebrate diversity! Live and Let Live, Barbie

Dear Barbie,

I have a friend who is considering insemination, but she's ambivalent about bringing up a child with love & structured values in a gay household. I told her I believe she could do it with just as much love as in a straight family. What do you think? Signed, Wondering

Hello Wondering,

Yes, it sounds like you gave your friend good advice. Studies have shown that homosexuals are just as capable as heterosexuals when it comes to raising children in a nurturing environment. Personally, I believe that beginning parents can benefit from taking a training class on how to be successful at parenting. Of course, every parent is unique and therefore, each family is unique. Everyone makes mistakes, so if your friend is hoping to be a perfect parent, she is setting herself up for disappointment. However, it sounds like she knows what she is getting into by the way she talks about wanting to bring up the children in a loving and structured household. Always remember, love makes a house a home.

Using his sexuality the way some folks wave a flyswatter.

We are Family, Barbie

Dear Barbie,

Please look into your crystal ball, and tell me why do I keep returning to a no win relationship?

Signed, Stuck in the Revolving Door

Hello Revolving Door,

Oh baby, you know the answer to that one—we all do. It's all about patterns, honey, patterns. We tend to fall into the same routine because habits are familiar to us, and we feel comfortable and safe with what we know. We think that these patterns are safe because they are predictable, and we know what to expect. But destructive patterns can harm us a great deal. So I recommend that you do a positive self-affirmation to break this pattern and change your perspective. Try repeating this message in your head throughout the day, "I am lovable. I love myself, and I deserve to be loved by others." Say this to yourself all day—every day. Take immediate action by starting this affirmation today. You need to realize that you are worth more than what you have been settling for in relationships. Act positively, and you will feel more positive about yourself. When this mental change happens, you will believe that you are worthy of nurturing love and not accept anything less. Then, I believe, the right person will step into your life.
